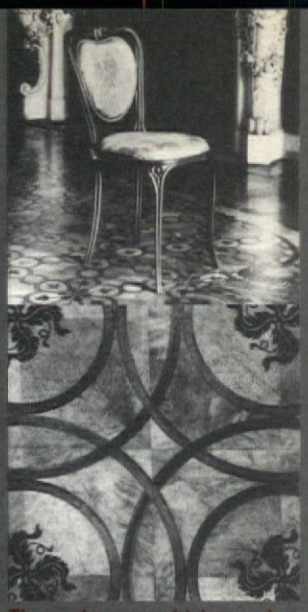
One hundred fifty years of Thonet: 1830/1980



Thonet moved his workshop from Boppard am Rhein to Vienna in 1842. While working on the interiors of the Liechtenstein Palace, he developed laminated veneer flooring. And his first bentwood chair.

The Bentwood Process: By steaming, hand bending and cooling solid pieces of beech in shaped metal molds, Michael Thonet was able to manufacture his chair designs rapidly and economically. He invented the process in 1847. The modern furniture industry was born.

Michael Thonet's motto: "Bend or break."

Beigen Oder Brechen

Produced in 1836, this Empire/Biedermeier style chair was made of molded plywood. Thonet had discovered, in 1830, that he could create furniture parts by saturating veneer strips with warm glue and then shaping and cooling the sections in molds. The assembled chair was more durable and more affordable than its solid wood predecessor.

WIEN.

The now classic Café Daum chair was made in 1849. For the first time, Thonet's bentwood production techniques were used in a commercial application.

It was one hundred and fifty years ago that Michael Thonet, a German cabinet maker, began to experiment with new ways of making furniture. The processes he invented, and the designs which grew out of them, brought furniture-making from the workshop to the factory, without destroying the spirit of craftsmanship. The Thonet tradition of joining technology and craft to produce great designs inspires the work we do today. This is the first in a series of capsule histories which highlight the extraordinary accomplishments of Michael Thonet and the firm he founded.

At Thonet, we are proud to be a part of this living tradition. In 1980, as in 1830, Thonet is the leader in the search for better methods and inventive designs.

To salute the 150th anniversary of Thonet, we are reproducing this and the four capsule histories which will follow as a poster. For a free copy, write us.

Haworth introduces the ultimate open plan power solution.

From ERA-1®, first comprehensive panel system ever pre-wired for power, comes the ultimate powered panel system. TriCircuit ERA-1. Three electrical circuits that can simultaneously power convenience outlets, specialized equipment and lighting systems, each of which can require a separate circuit. Or, with the flip of a built-in switch, circuits can be reallocated according to need. Click. Click. Click.

Snap-in receptacles place power wherever needed and complete circuit selection means no capacity is wasted—unlike most dual-circuit systems, where a factory-dedicated lighting circuit leaves only one optional use circuit.

The TriCircuit raceway is also field-retrofittable to original ERA-1 panels. It's something you'd expect from Haworth. A final, not intermediate, power solution.

Implications of Proposition 13 on school design is among topics featured at 1980 AASA convention

Anaheim — "Vouchers: Proposition 13: Of the Public Purse" and "Proposition 13: Dark Days for Schools" are two topics that experts will take opposing views on as part of the courses and seminars offered at the 1980 American Association of School Administrators. After these pro and con presentations, members of the audience will have a chance to challenge the speakers. All will then vote to determine which point of view won the day.

More than 20,000 top educational leaders are expected to attend the convention. This year's theme, Champions of Learning, sets the tone for the program which will be held at the Anaheim Convention Center Feb. 15-18.

Co-host of CBS's 60 Minutes, Mike Wallace will address the Saturday morning General Session, and Professor Zacharie Clements from the University of Vermont will speak on Sunday morning. Top attraction of AASA's series of events for spouses of convention participants is Polly Bergen, who will address the Partners Program luncheon. The Saturday night show will feature Bob Hope, and Monday night's last official event will showcase Lawrence Welk. AASA conventioners will have Disneyland all to themselves from 7:00 p.m. until midnight Friday evening, February 15.

AASA awards, which honor some of the most distinguished persons in American education, include Distinguished Service Award, Educational Development Awards, the Golden Key Award, the American Education Award, and AIA Awards for outstanding school building design. Rudd's new Manhattan Group

Standing tall in the office.

Why Manhattan? Form a mental image of the famous skyline. Then compare it to the picture and you'll see what we mean.

As jaunty as these case-goods look, they function even better. Like so many Manhattan store fronts, the front door rolls all the way up so it's out of the way, and all the way down for concealment, where it locks.

Available in 7 colors and 8 configurations, they can be used in multiples for a uniquely beautiful storage system or singly as functional sculpture.

Flight 80™

Every open plan office has desk accessories. But they are rarely shown in ads. (Just browse through this magazine for proof.) Maybe it's because, until now, the design of the accessories detracted from the design of the office. Or looked dated. Flight 80 combines reality with design: functional but good-looking steel desk accessories in a spectrum of earth tones or four woodgrain and leather-like vinyls. Or you can custom order a finish to meet your specifications. The Flight 80 desk tray is stackable and universally sized to hold letters, legal documents, even file folders with tabs. Eventually, every office you do will have desk accessories. Why not specify Flight 80? They'll enhance your design. Globe-Weis. P.O. Box 398, Wauseon, Ohio 43567; P.O. GSA clampdown on purchasing argued by NOPA

Washington, D.C. — Following the General Services Administration decision to halt all government purchases of office furniture pending a review of existing inventory and use, National Office Product Association (NOPA) representatives met with GSA administrator Rowland G. Freeman III to obtain clarification on the moratorium and express NOPA concern on industry impact.

Representing NOPA at the meeting were: Donald Haspel, NOPA executive vice president; Bruce McLellan, director of government relations; Reed Smith, executive vice president of Charles G. Stott & Co.; and Mike Timbers, president of the Washington Management Group, NOPA's consultants on government procurement.

Freeman requested federal agency heads to review all current and future office furniture needs before submitting requisitions to GSA or placing further orders under existing GSA schedules.

"Requisitions should be placed only for emergency requirements until we are able to review and identify all furniture currently on hand and available for use," said Freeman.

The moratorium, according to Freeman, applies to all Class 71 furniture and will last until GSA has taken a complete inventory of existing furniture stock, a process estimated to take three months.

At the meeting, NOPA stressed the impact that the moratorium could have on the industry, pointing out the decision to halt purchases unfairly favors suppliers whose schedule contracts are already negotiated and signed.

Despite NOPA's arguments, however, the moratorium will remain effective and Freeman indicated it may be extended to other commodity lines.

Freeman also noted that systems furniture orders are exempt from the moratorium, and while no contracts may be signed, the decision to halt purchases should not affect ongoing negotiation.

According to several dealers, the clampdown on purchasing affects not only Class 71 furniture, but also covers 11 other categories.

SCAMP sound masking helps keep your office door closed even if you don't have an office door.

Can improve worker efficiency and executive privacy in open office environments.

The incorporation of an unobtrusive SCAMP sound masking system into open office environments is essential to maintaining speech privacy. It reduces the effects of speech, business machine and other distracting noises exterior to an open office area. The background sound that SCAMP provides is electronically produced and specifically tuned to provide the degree of privacy required. For example, SCAMP units can be adjusted for the normal privacy office workers need to perform their assignments efficiently. And, as well, for the confidential privacy executives may require. SCAMP also provides a medium for voice paging, music or emergency tone bursts.

SCAMP is a lightweight, self-contained solid-state device that uses less than 3 watts of power and requires no maintenance. Available in exposed or plenum models, it's easy to install and its cost is quickly paid for in more productive man-hours. That's why there are more than 10 million square feet of office space covered by SCAMP systems right now and more being installed every day.

Besides individually tunable SCAMP units we also offer centrally controlled systems. The best way to find out about your requirement is to send us a floor plan for a free analysis. We'll examine it and determine the best sound masking plan for you based on both the masking efficiency and cost effectiveness. Write today or call for further details.

The ultimate in speech privacy by the leader in sound masking.

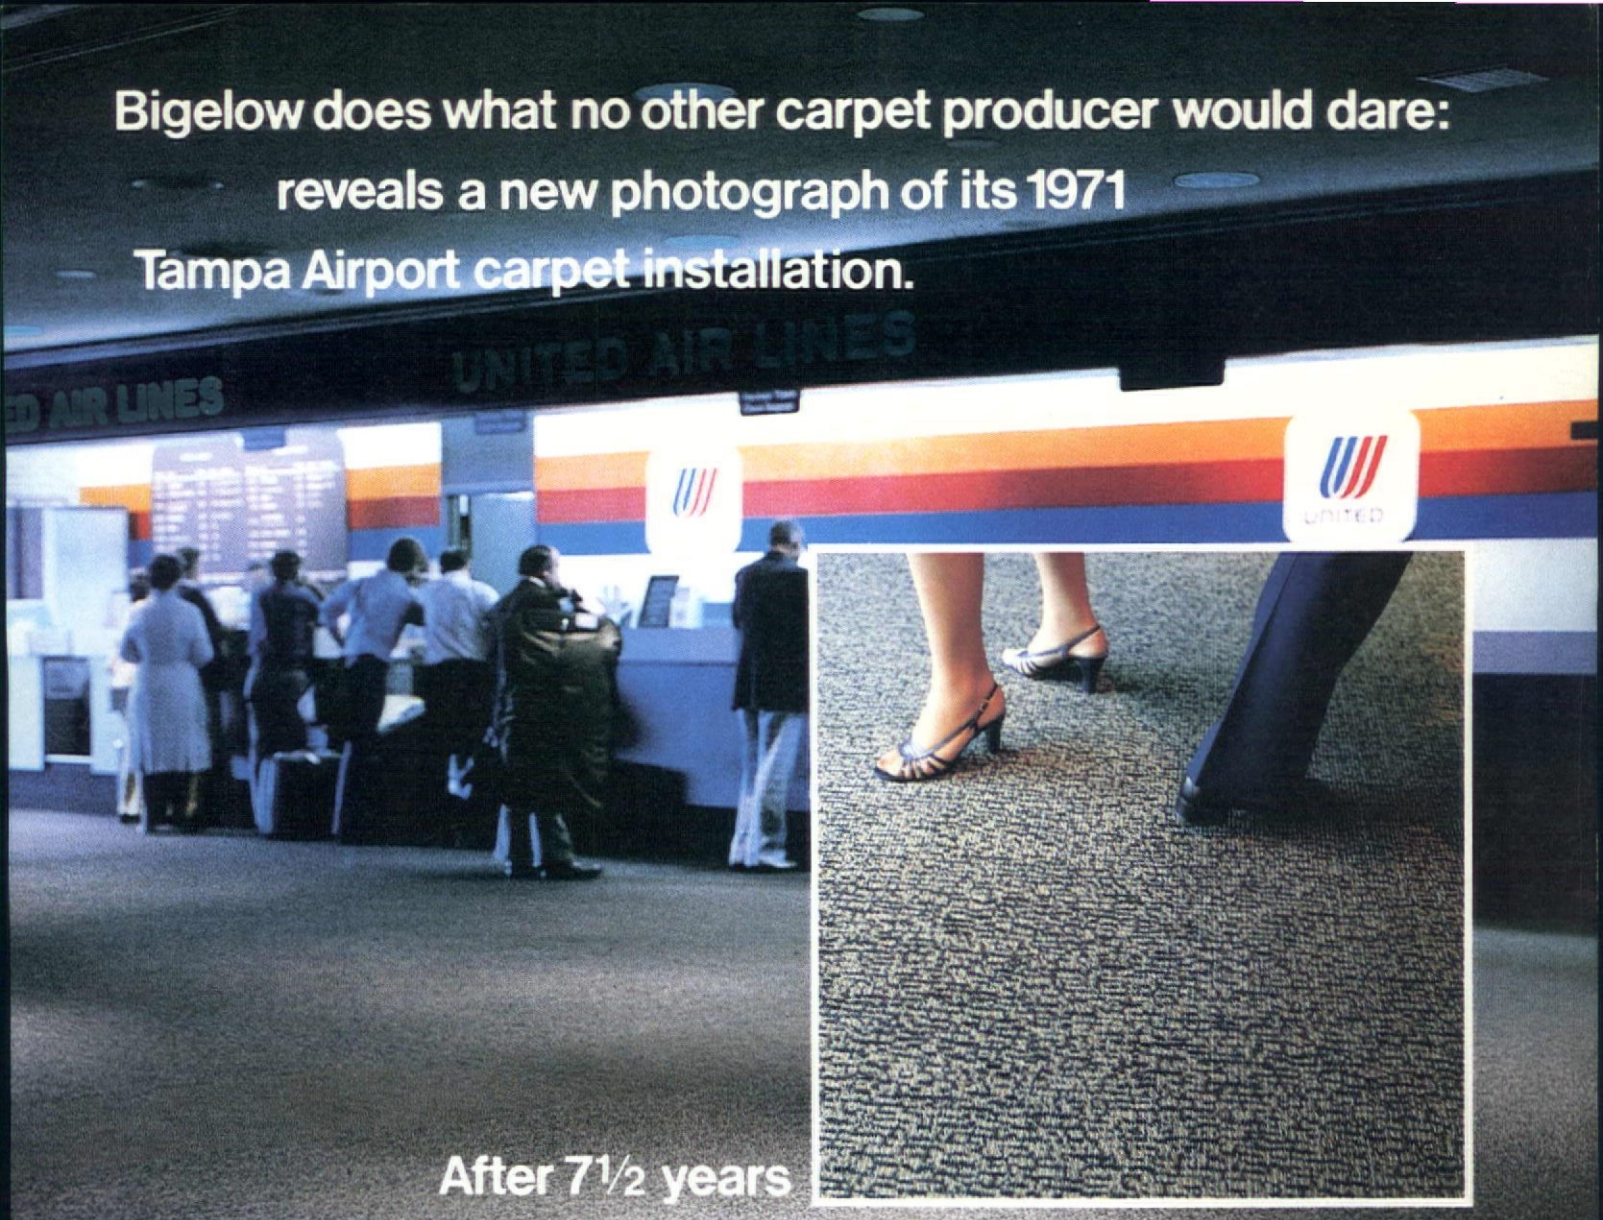
Bigelow does what no other carpet producer would dare: reveals a new photograph of its 1971 Tampa Airport carpet installation.



After 7½ years and over 100,000,000 people, it looks brand-new and beautiful. That's Beauty & The Bottom Line.

Obviously good design, superb color, professional service, static control, soil resistance and sound absorption are all important in contract carpet. But the real question is...does it still look good long after it's on the job? If it's not tough under tough conditions...the world's best design is worthless. Take another look at the photograph. With this kind of extraordinary performance at Tampa Airport, think what Bigelow can offer you and your clients.

The two telecommunications raceways—big enough for up to sixteen 25-pair cables—will handle all the phones and terminals your client is ever likely to need. And the two electrical raceways will hold up to six 20-amp circuits.

Tempo 3 has flexibility. You can order all the pre-wired outlets your client needs—and additional outlets can be retrofitted at any time. Available on one or both sides of the panel, in the base or desk high.

Wiring capacity and flexibility are two of the advantages you get when you design with Tempo 3. We'd like to show you the others. Call your Shaw-Walker representative, or write Shaw-Walker, 833 Division Street, Muskegon, Michigan 49443.

For those who see differently.

The luxurious look of spun acrylic, now longer wearing in carpet of Herculon®.

Admittedly, carpet of spun acrylic yarn is beautiful. But so is the carpet pictured here. And it's a lot more practical and economical.

It's the new heather-look carpet tufted of Herculon* olefin fiber. Of filament yarn, not spun. And it will outwear heavier weights of acrylic by far.

Naturally it offers all the other easy care advantages Herculon is famous for—built-in resistance to fading and staining and very low static buildup.

There's a wide choice of color combinations in this new yarn system. It's ideal for offices, schools, motels, and health-care facilities. If you see things differently, take a look at hard-wearing, heather-look carpets of Herculon.

For more information and resources for "Heather-Look" carpet of Herculon, write: Hercules Incorporated, 3169 Holcomb Bridge Road, Suite 301, Norcross, Ga. 30071.

ANSI approves new building accessibility standard

Philadelphia — A new standard for making buildings accessible for people with handicaps was recently approved at the National Easter Seal convention. Accepted by the Board of Management Review of the American National Standards Institute (ANSI), the standard is the result of a five year project involving builders, manufacturers, organizations representing handicapped consumers, and regulatory agencies.

The new ANSI standard is expected to be referenced in federal regulations and building codes within the coming year. Completion of the new standard is seen as critical in gaining uniformity in the mandate governing the compliance of federal laws that guarantee rights of all handicapped persons to participate in educational, recreational, housing, and other community services.

For the first time, included in the standard are specifications for living units; including mobile homes, dormitories, and other residences, design specifications for width of doorways, placement of wall fixtures, elevation of ramps, drinking fountains, and bathroom fixtures.

Participating in the Easter Seal program were representatives from code bodies, American National Standards Institute, and the U.S. Department of HUD.

Portfolio depicts historic Art Deco district of Miami

Miami Beach — A portfolio of photographs by David Kaminsky, noted architectural photographer, has been published to portray the country's first 20th Century historic Art Deco district here. Issued at the 33rd National Trust for Historic Preservation annual conference in San Francisco, the publication is a 40-page, full color book that explains the style of Miami Beach Art Deco.

According to Bill Bucolo, publisher, editorial material was funded by a grant to the Miami Design Preservation League from the National Endowment for the Arts. Articles include an introduction by Karalyn Robinson, Chairperson of MDPL (Miami Design Preservation League). Carl J. Weinhardt, Jr., Director of Vizcaya and member of the State Historic Preservation Committee, has written an article tracing Art Deco in the 20s and 30s and the development of the unique Miami Beach style. Barbara Baer Capitman, Executive Director of MDPL, and her son Andrew, discuss the social and political problems of 20th Century preservation and visualize the district's future.

Portfolio also contains statements from well-known artists and preservationists such as Duane Hansen, Mrs. John Held Jr., Philip Johnson, Richard Oliver, William Murtagh, and Chris T. Delaporte. The publication may be purchased in local newsstands and book shops, or by contacting the Miami Design Preservation League, 1630 Euclid Ave., Miami Beach, FL 33139.

Anvil carpet...because it's a tough race.

Millions of feet are off and running on Colonnade's Anvil carpet, a hardy broadloom of Herculon IV olefin fiber with an amazing track record. And a winning price.

Anvil has the beauty of natural fiber carpets. But it outwears them by far thanks to its strength and densely textured construction. Anvil leads the race in many ways: With solution-dyed hearthtones, resistance to stains and soil, and low static build-up. All assuring easy maintenance. A 5-year warranty lets you know you're taking no chances. Put your money on Anvil, and bet on a sure thing.

DO YOUR STOCKHOLDERS HAVE HIGHER E.Qs. THAN YOU?

(Economics Quotients)

TAKE THIS QUICK QUIZ AND RATE YOURSELF.

True False

☐ ☐ (1.) Since 1960, the U.S. has had the highest productivity growth rate in manufacturing of leading free world industrial nations.

☐ ☐ (2.) One out of five American workers belongs to a labor union.

☐ ☐ (3.) With six per cent of the world's population, the U.S. uses almost 18% per cent of the world's estimated energy production.

☐ ☐ (4.) Over the past decade corporate profits (after taxes) averaged less than five cents on each dollar of sales, or about 12 per cent return on stockholder investments.

Did our little E.Q. quiz stump you? Your stockholders may have breezed through it. But don't feel too bad. A recent national survey has shown many people don't know even basic facts and figures about our American Economic System. Or much about how it works. In short, a lot of Economics Quotients, E.Qs., could stand some improvement.

It's important. Not just because we all face some important decisions about our economic system. But because the more we know about our system, the more we'll be able to make it work for us as producers, investors, and consumers.

A special booklet has been prepared to help you learn more about what makes our American Economic System tick. It's fact-filled easy reading and free. It's also an easy way to raise your E.Q.. For your copy, just clip the coupon.

ANSWERS:

Construction begins on Design Center Northwest in early 1980

Seattle — Construction on a 156,000 sq. ft. addition to Design Center Northwest, which will more than double the size of the current facility, will begin early in 1980. The addition will be built on an adjacent site and will connect to the original building via a dramatic sky bridge, insuring continuous traffic flow to all showrooms.

Heavy demand for space, both from existing exhibitors and other resources, precipitated the decision to expand, says Jack A. Benaroya, developer and owner of the interior furnishings center.

In-store display designed to pull in customers

New York — The Viking Sewing Machine project, designed by Frischman-Freund Inc., provides Viking dealers with an environmental insert in existing stores for product display, direct sales, and consumer education. Each insert is designed to display the Viking line in such a way that it pulls the potential customer into the space, then moves him around so that each machine is presented.

Each insert contains a product demonstration area, cutting tables, a know-how core with the latest information on Viking machines, instructional material, and how-to articles by the Viking Educational Department.

Photo-mural banner treatment above each insert creates both product activity identification and a covering for the inserts, while providing a shop environment.

In store displays, one fights for every inch of space. The concept here was to create such a distinctive unit that Viking products would stand out even though the dealer sold competitive products.

New carpet makes elegant debut at Cartier

New York—Cartier, elite among fine jewelry stores, was the site of a reception to introduce a new Collins & Aikman luxury carpet, Eligere, recently. All Cartier floors in the landmark building are covered with Eligere, a chamois quality in Autumn Glow, made of DuPont's Antron III fiber. The installation took 520 square yards. Among those attending the reception (l. to r.): Ralph Destino, Cartier president; Gladys Solomon, well known personality; William D. Wiegand, president of C&A's carpet division; Arlene Dahl, actress, author and beauty columnist; Gerald Leifer, VP/sales for the Eligere carpet line; Suzy Chaffee, Olympic Gold Medal Winner; and Donald F. McCullough, board chairman and chief executive officer of Collins & Aikman.

Only the finest ingredients make Customweave Carpets. The luxury spec.

Customweave makes carpet only one way—the very best possible. All the extras are built in. We use only the finest fibers, like the Dow Badische Zefran® Blend ZK-3 yarns in our Financial Place and Business Square carpet. The result is a carpet having uncommonly dense construction, rich textures and dramatic color.

Each of the Customweave qualities for public areas imparts a sense of timeless design and harmony with its surroundings. They are intended for use in prestigious areas wherever the most distinctive furnishings are desired.

And Customweave craftsmanship complements the look and feel of luxury with the ability to perform under virtually any traffic condition.

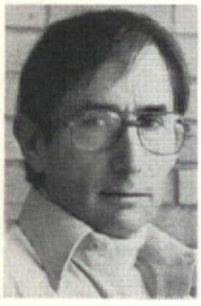
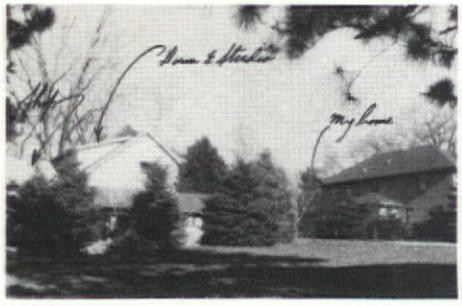
Hugh Acton to open furniture design school in September 1980

Augusta, Mich. — Noted furniture designer Hugh Acton has announced plans to open a school for furniture design in September, 1980. "My endeavor will be to direct students to the relevance of design to people. Equally of importance will be the pursuit of those elements that transcend methods and material, technology and utility, and become the intrinsic part of design, of purpose, and performance," says Acton. "The school, ACTON, will be both investigative and pragmatic, teaching the art of survival of a designer, immunizing against conformity, and justifying the frustrations of originality."

Acton, who has a B.A. degree in Philosophy and an M.F.A. in Design, will conduct classes at his rural home. Facilities include a design studio, model shop, barn studio, dormitory, and his own house, on 70 acres of rolling Michigan hills and streams. "I want students to develop a personal awareness with nature, which is a positive stimulant to good design."

Acton hopes to attract from four to 14 committed designers. Interested persons can reach him at: 7801 N. 46th St., Augusta, MI 49012, 616/731-5266.





Hugh Acton will conduct classes in a bucolic setting for four to 14 "committed designers."

Renaissance center gallery deals in Far Eastern art

Detroit — Alfred B. Ford, great-grandson of Henry Ford, has established Ramayan Arts, Inc., a retail and wholesale business merchandising fine art from the Far East valued at more than $1 million.

Ramayan Arts retail gallery is located in Renaissance Center and the wholesale division, including offices and warehouse, is headquartered in Harmonie Park. The gallery represents Asian antiques and art.

Designed by William Kessler & Associates, Detroit-based architects, the triangular shaped gallery is easily identified by two exterior sides of high-gloss red-orange finish, with narrow slots spaced to arouse shopper curiosity. On the opposite side, Michael Patten, project designer in charge, designed the window showcase to extend out of the gallery, getting illumination from skylights.

Interior gallery space of more than 2,000 sq. ft. is replete with custom-made furnishings and fixtures, including white marble niches that contain seating arrangements, touch control drawers, and open shelving for storage and display. The gallery is cut diagonally to parallel the natural light from one solid glass wall, and joins the two main mall areas, creating a street effect for browsing.

The graphic identity system is applied to signage, packaging, stationery, and printed materials, and was designed by Ford & Earl Design Associates.

Colors for 1981 have rosy future, predicts CMG

Washington, D.C. — A warmer cast in most color families, with significant new colors in the red/pink/coral range, is predicted for 1981, according to the Color Marketing Group. Issuing its 1981 Color Directions palette—a total of 45 colors representing a trend analysis for key industries—CMG finds a basic stability in color direction, continuing a softer and more elegant appearance.

Spicy earthtones and blues will continue, while grays will grow in importance with new additions. New green colors join a light celadon and deeper spruce. Neutrals will still be very much in evidence.

CMG's Color Directions are established annually by the CMG membership, representing professionals in all facets of industries involved with color. These include toys and textiles, furniture and laminates, paper and paint, carpets and cosmetics, automobiles and appliances.

Carpeting of Antron® III resists dirt better, stays new-looking longer.

The secret: Unique hollow-filament fibers.

Antron* III nylon is the only carpet fiber with a rounded hollow-filament structure. So it resists dirt better than other nylon fibers. The smooth exterior shape of Antron® III minimizes dirt entrapment, and the hollow-filament structure scatters light to make dirt less apparent. So the carpet stays new-looking longer than ordinary nylon carpeting.

Antron® III is durable. Pile of Antron® III resists crushing and abrasion even in heavy-traffic areas. Keeps its fresh, new look.

Magnification 250X of Antron* III nylon showing hollow filaments and round, anti-static filament.

Antron® III controls static shock. Gives you protection that won't wear out or shampoo out—because it's built right into the fiber.

That's why Braniff International used carpeting of Antron® III nylon to cover over 279,000 square feet in its new World Headquarters building at the Dallas/Fort Worth Airport. And why your next contract carpet should be Antron® III nylon.

Booklets to attract vocational students to industry jobs

Dallas — A major problem the furnishings industry faces is the lack of unskilled and semi-skilled workers in blue-collar jobs. To help offset the problem, the Educational Foundation of the National Home Fashions League is publishing a series of job description booklets, entitled "How To Make A Living," with each booklet devoted to a specific segment of the market.

The booklets are designed primarily to help those who will not have the opportunity for specialized education find well paying, rewarding work in the interior furnishings industry.

Newest booklet and fourth in the series, "How To Make a Living in the Wallcovering Industry," describes jobs in manufacturing various kinds of wallcoverings, as well as distribution, sales, and installation of roll goods and other products used as wallcoverings.

Previous booklets deal with the furniture industry, carpet industry, and resilient flooring industry. To date, more than 10,000 of these booklets have been distributed to vocational schools and guidance counselors. A fifth booklet on the window covering industry is now being prepared.

A nominal charge of 25 cents is made for each booklet. Booklets are available through NHFL Educational Foundation, 107 World Trade Center, Dallas, TX 75258.

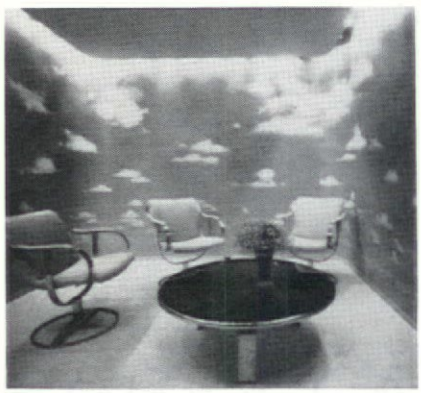
Warm, tactile theme for office options



Redesigning the New York showroom of Steelcase, the firm that sponsored the Louis Harris Poll on office environments, James R. Vaughan, GSID, had an unusual design team. In addition to working with Steelcase management, the designer incorporated the voices of 1,047 office workers surveyed in the poll.

Vaughan, President, Related Designs, New York, presented Series 9000 office furniture, in its infinite mechanical variation, in a soft setting of mauves and grays. The warm color choices are complemented by subtle curved elements, from platforms to the furniture itself. The carpeting, 12-in. gray grid on mauve, allows contract designer/specifiers to evaluate workstation requirements at a glance.

The showroom unfolds in an ordered sequence of groupings, singled out with blue, tomato red, and grey panels, punctuated with amethyst, blue, and heather upholstery. A large presentation/conference room has a hushed atmosphere with light gray/blue walls and highback, charcoal gray chairs. Business proceedings get a high altitude lift in the small conference room with life size clouds on a blue sky spanning the curved, windowless space. Rough tweed carpet coordinates with seating upholstery for a feeling of closure in this airborne room for furniture display. □

Acoustical pads fit in framework

Douglas Ball's Race System for Sunar has been modified for a more streamlined look with acoustical pads that fit into a rib-and-post framework. Structural posts attach at midpoint and end of beam to support rails for any combination of shelving pads, and ambient lighting. In addition, the universal post and connector system was recently retooled for two 90°, one 180°, and two 45° beams. Universal support posts carry the weight of work surfaces, storage units, and machinery. Cantilevered tops hang from the raceway with no attachment points so adjustments can be made easily to fit changing needs. Specialized corner tops for CRTs and word processing stations are available. Both power and communications are enclosed in long horizontal beams placed at work surface height for maximum accessibility for users. Six, 8-, and 10-ft. lengths combine on 2-ft. increments. A midpoint connection branches off on 3-, 4-, and 5-ft. centers. Circle No. 224.

New oak or metal-framed acoustical walls. Plus your present furniture, our wall-hung components, or both. A better office environment starts with HARTER/Wall.

Oak-framed Harter/Wall in administrative offices of Tri-Met (Tri-County Metropolitan Transportation District) Portland, Oregon.

Harter/Wall gets right to the heart of your need for handsome space and improved productivity. It's a wall system which installs overnight, yet has the look and stability of a permanent wall.

The appearance is clean and uncluttered. Long corridor walls are straight as an arrow. Without frequent posts to go out of alignment during (or after) installation, a frequent problem of post-and-panel systems.

The 2½" Harter/Wall acoustical design helps everyone concentrate on their own work. Sound-absorbing fiberglass is covered with handsome fabric, color-coordinated with your choice of metal or solid Oak frames. Frames fit solidly to each other, meeting the floor with no visible or audible gaps.

And Harter/Wall efficiently uses every square inch of space. Our patented Lockslide permits you to extend another wall anywhere between panels, to create space which fits existing furniture, one-of-a-kind EDP equipment, or building pillars to a fraction of an inch. Or, as circled above, to cleanly divide space to fit the work flow.

Harter/Wall goes up fast, changes fast to meet the challenge of today's office... and tomorrow's. Currently we're custom-producing Harter/Wall systems in just 6 weeks. Write us today and we'll tell you more.

ASTOUNDING TECHNOLOGY PORTENDS DRASTIC OFFICE CHANGES IN '80s

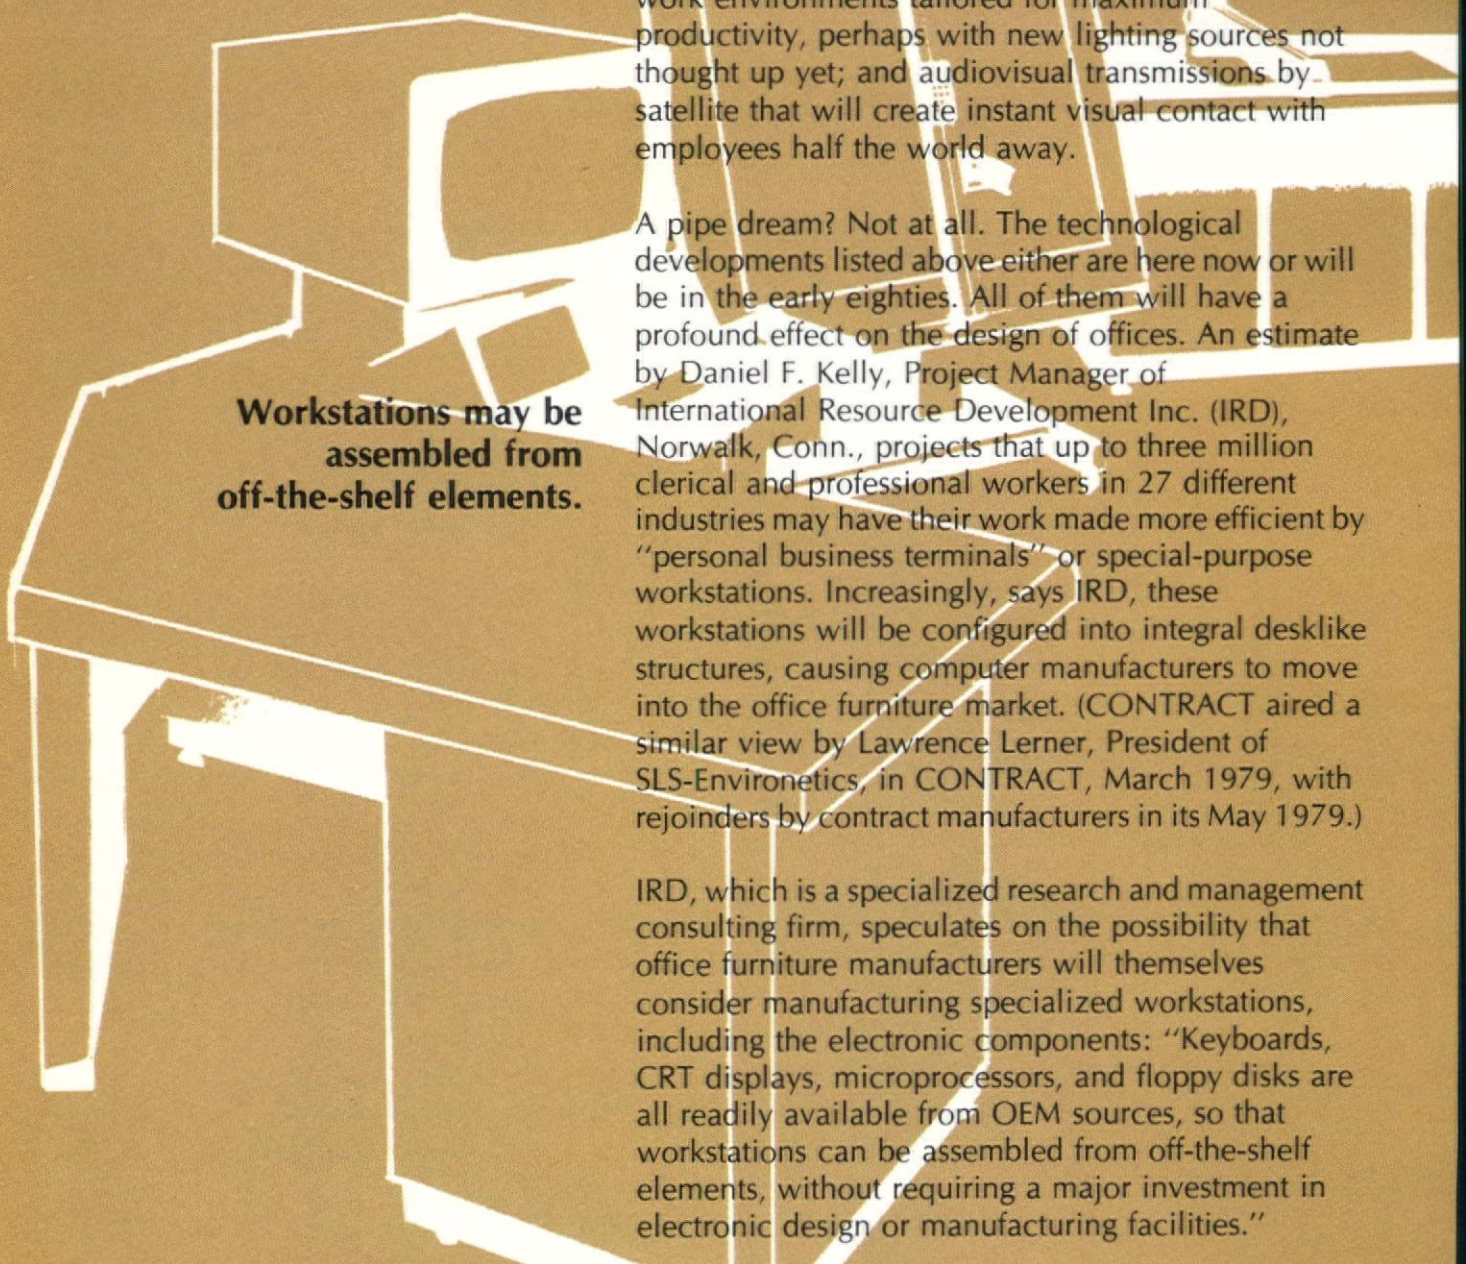
What the pencil did for communications, the microprocessor will do for the office in the eighties. For the uninitiated, the microprocessor is a fusion of electronics and computing that combines three vital functions: memory, logic, and speed. All three are combined in what is called a silicon chip, so small that if you drop it on your carpeted office floor, you may have trouble finding it, since it measures only one-fifth of an inch square.

Computers will have ability to talk back to operators.

In that mini-mini circuit, however, is the equivalent of 8,000 transistors. Recall that transistors took the place of vacuum tubes and that the portable radio, which you may have in your pocket, incorporated four to eight transistors. Predictions are that by the mid-1980s, a chip that size will have about one million components in it. The implications for office design are astounding. Here are some of the microprocessor-involved information management developments contract designers and manufacturers are all ready, or will be, dealing with:

Voice actuated typing, which will involve an executive talking into a microphone and having his words translated into typing; facsimile copiers, which transmit standard 8½ by 11-in. sheets of data in a matter of minutes, or, if the copier incorporates built-in, optical character recognition capability, at the rate of five or six seconds per page; a laser beam printer-receiver-transmitter of documents over telephone lines, which prints at a rate of 1,800 characters per second or 36 pages per minute; talk-back computers, which invite operators to talk to them and then talk back, instead of relying on the typewriter keyboard; nationwide electronic mail systems, which will circumscribe the slower post office department and deliver mail from the California office to the

A glimpse of the '80s is provided by Auto-Trol Technology Corp., which provides computer hardware (left) for the space design industry.



Workstations may be assembled from off-the-shelf elements.

New York office in a matter of hours; CRTs at every desk, which will permit accessing files and detailed information at the press of a button; computer data banks, which will store untold amounts of information and catalogs for immediate access; highly efficient work environments tailored for maximum productivity, perhaps with new lighting sources not thought up yet; and audiovisual transmissions by satellite that will create instant visual contact with employees half the world away.

A pipe dream? Not at all. The technological developments listed above either are here now or will be in the early eighties. All of them will have a profound effect on the design of offices. An estimate by Daniel F. Kelly, Project Manager of International Resource Development Inc. (IRD), Norwalk, Conn., projects that up to three million clerical and professional workers in 27 different industries may have their work made more efficient by "personal business terminals" or special-purpose workstations. Increasingly, says IRD, these workstations will be configured into integral desklike structures, causing computer manufacturers to move into the office furniture market. (CONTRACT aired a similar view by Lawrence Lerner, President of SLS-Environetics, in CONTRACT, March 1979, with rejoinders by contract manufacturers in its May 1979.)

IRD, which is a specialized research and management consulting firm, speculates on the possibility that office furniture manufacturers will themselves consider manufacturing specialized workstations, including the electronic components: "Keyboards, CRT displays, microprocessors, and floppy disks are all readily available from OEM sources, so that workstations can be assembled from off-the-shelf elements, without requiring a major investment in electronic design or manufacturing facilities."

Equipment will be designed to aid decision making.

But that is educated speculation on possible new specification sources. More important to the designer and specifier who will be doing office planning and design are the implications of how radically offices in the eighties will be changed. While some claim that the office is primarily a place to process and communicate information, the reality is that the basic function is as a place to make decisions. Therefore, all of the new equipment, devices, and furnishings that go into an office will be designed to maximize the efficiency of information management, retrieval, and decision making.

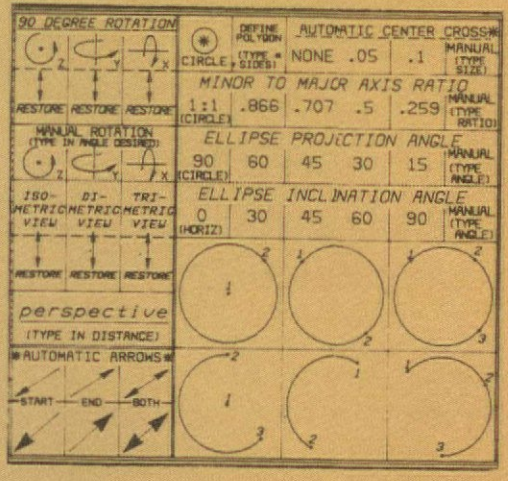
Inevitably, there will be a proliferation of CRTs (cathode ray tubes) at workstations, because access to computer-stored data will be one of the prime functions of the systems in bringing processed information to those who will reprocess, use the data, and make those decisions. That condition alone, in addition to greater use of duplicating and other office machines, will have a significant effect on the design of office space. Lighting that eliminates veiling reflections, new power management sources and equipment, and work environments that provide thermal controls for the comfort of the employee are only a few of the design criteria that will have to be reckoned with by specifiers.

Moreover, the growth in white collar workers that is projected for the eighties, both in government and the private sector, means that all of this complex equipment—from word processing centers to highly automated workstations, will have to retain the flexibility designed into the open plan scheme 10 and 15 years prior. Departments will still change overnight, some will be moved to another building two miles away, others will be added or combined with bigger or smaller departments, and some even will disappear. The dynamics of business growth and the effect it has on office design will continue to bedevil the space planner with challenges that have not even been dreamed of up to now.

Components will be miniaturized to enhance communications.



The National Office Products Association (NOPA) estimates that word processors, which totaled around 200,000 units in 1974 will reach about the two million mark by 1989. NOPA spells out projected growth in office dictation machines, copy and duplicating equipment, computing machines, telephone and communications equipment, and calculators in its July/August 1979 special report that dwarfs the imagination.

Coupled with all this is the drive toward miniaturization, which will shrink the size of all of the electronic equipment mentioned earlier. Projections are that CRT terminals will even become mobile and businesspersons will simply disconnect units on their desks and take the CRTs with them when they go to lunch or home at the end of the day. One telephone call and a special plug will enable them to access in the home the same information available in the office. The possibilities are endless, limited only by the ingenuity of the same people who brought chunks of the moon back to earth.

While the special article in this issue on power accessing developments reflects the latest developments for the early eighties—flat wire, raised floors, and so forth—miniaturization may decrease the actual amount of power needed per appliance. The number of appliances, however, promises to increase as the office becomes more and more automated.

Michael Brill, President of the Buffalo Organization for Social & Technological Innovation, says, "About 10 years ago, when I worked at the National Bureau of Standards, we started to develop performance specifications on Federal office buildings, with the aim of reducing costs.

An analysis that we did was reasoned out as follows: If one perceives the office building as part of a system for producing information—and that is what it is—the components consist of people, reproducing machines, systems furniture, machines to add value to information, and other office tools. Examining the cost of that intricate system over a period of 30 years, the first cost of the building is 2 percent of all the money paid out over that three-decade time frame. The cost of heat, light, and maintenance is another 6 percent. What is paid out for people is 92 percent. The issue then becomes that instead of trying to reduce the first cost—what already is the smallest cost—instead of squeezing something out of something that already is squeezed to start with, we ought to be trying to find a way to use that building to support people's performance in the office. In effect, if one believes that the 2 percent cost of facility has an impact on the 92 percent, then current priorities are wrong.

Government white collar employees will double in next ten years.

Results of Brill's first definitive study of how environment affects productivity in the office will be available in the spring. The parameters of that study are outlined in one of the following articles.

An appreciation of the productivity problem, pegged by many as one of the biggest faced by industry, is in the projected expansion of white collar employees. By 1988, according to the U.S. Department of Labor, nearly half of the 104.3 million civilian workers will be employed in offices, with that number expected to keep increasing. At the government level, the number of white collar employees is expected to double in the next 10 years.

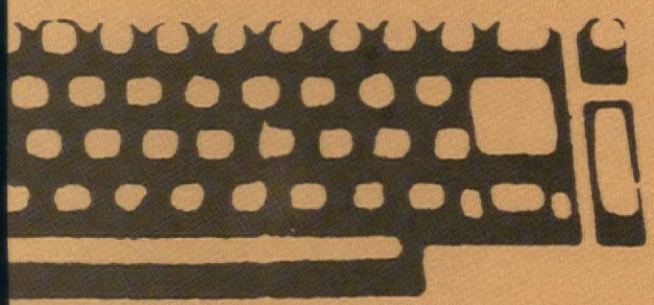
This anticipated growth and for reasons already outlined, business management has increasingly adopted the open plan scheme for design of its offices. Among the reasons is anticipated Return On Investment, otherwise known as ROI. Where systems furniture is used, tax write offs are available over a seven or 10 year period that are not available in conventional offices.

Open plan offices, which lend themselves to change at significantly lower costs—50¢ per square foot vs. $18.00 or more—also provide savings in use of vertical space. More efficient use of vertical space reduces storage costs, as well as rental costs generally, since less space is needed on the floor. Rentals of $18 and $22 per square foot in highly desirable areas provide a good example of potential savings. Save 1,000 sq. ft. and the company can save $22,000 per year. No manager is oblivious to this.

Shorter work week, decentralization of offices in offing.

On the energy scene, task/ambient lighting in open plan installations has enabled wattages to be reduced from five watts per square foot to 1½ and 2 watts per square foot for lighting. Greater use of machines, however, may mitigate those savings. But a reduction in one area keeps the aggregate sum down.



Implications of the office of the future are far reaching. Greater efficiency in the office environment and the thrust to conserve energy may result in a shorter work week. Businesses will be given the capacity to decentralize, move to the suburbs, since information heretofore found only in the centralized main office will be available to any satellite with the use of the computer and CRT terminals.

But by far, the greatest impetus in the technologically complex eighties will be the ability of management to make intelligent decisions fast, based on fast communication and immediately available information.

The space design and specification industry must gear now to meet those irresistible needs.—Len Corlin

SYSTEM PROJECTS FUTURE NEEDS

Environmental Research & Development is a New York City-headquartered firm with offices in Los Angeles and London. It supports a professional staff of programmers, planners, designers, engineers, real estate and management specialists, and architects with expertise in all aspects of space analysis, facility design, and construction. The company is able, consequently, to provide clients with one accountable source to fulfill every possible space need. Included are feasibility studies, lease negotiation, real estate purchase, interior space design and specification, furniture management, and construction and project management.

Eugene Boshes

Robert Lee Engel

ERD recently led a two-day seminar in New York City on the role of the computer in space design and management sponsored by CONTRACT Magazine. It is scheduled to be held again in Los Angeles early this year. This article is a recapitulation of some of the areas of interest and material covered in that seminar program.

The use of the computer in space design and management enables both corporation executives and their space planners to avoid all the ills of a space crunch due to constant facility change and growth. Computer management systems track changes, anticipate future needs, and permit on-going planning through accurate forecasting. Since the building and maintenance of corporate facilities are two of the more costly expenses of a company, effective space planning and design has an important influence on the economics of corporate operations.

"That is the reason, in a nutshell, for the use of the computer in space planning and management," says Eugene Boshes, President and founder of Environmental Research & Development (ERD), one of the first companies to harness the computer in space management.

At the heart of computer applications to space management, according to ERD, is recognition of a "facility cycle." Boshes explains, "The average corporation moves every six or seven years. Six separate, yet related, elements in facility maintenance and development are identified in our model. When a company locates its position in that cycle, looking both backward and forward, it can enter the cycle at any point.

Facility reaches functional breaking point when stretched too far

"Typically, if a corporation is not in the process of undergoing a major move or reconfiguration, it probably falls in the 'facility management' sphere, which is the accommodation on a day-to-day basis of personnel, operations and functions, supplies, equipment, and furnishings that comprise the facility itself. Implicit in this maintenance stage is the idea that, over time, the constant stretching to accommodate new personnel and operations strains the physical limits of the plant. The facility, in effect, reaches a functional breaking point where a major change is dictated.

"The cycle then falls into a period of planning, programming, and analysis in an attempt for the corporation to recapture the original functionality of its facilities, before the crowding started. This 'feasibility study' phase is the time for evaluating and decision-making, which is divided into two sub-categories: programming and analysis."

Facilities manager has built-in conflict of interest

The program phase involves the development of a distinct series of specifications that define a functional facility. A second sub-phase involves the analysis of a series of alternatives or critical paths necessary to accomplish this set of specifications.

Following that, a planning and design phase can involve architectural and interior planning, as well as overall business or operations planning. A subsequent segment of the cycle is the construction or physical change period, which creates the programmed and designed environment.

Return to the management phase starts with the fully functioning, completed facility. That Facilities Management phase represents at least two-thirds of the facilities cycle time and begins as soon as the facility has been completely prepared, built, furnished, equipped, and people moved in.

"Endemic to this phase," says Robert Lee Engel, Vice President, "is a built-in conflict of interest. The facilities manager must, on the one hand, satisfy the continuing needs of the individual department heads for functioning space; and, on the other hand, must satisfy the overall budgets and allocations for facilities, which are the responsibility of the administrative staff of the corporation. This works fine, so long as the demands for ongoing change made by department heads do not conflict with one another.

From computer input, data on square feet of space and number of persons who will occupy space is projected over time. Every decision justified

"When they do, trouble starts with inter-departmental politicking. Changes are made not by the facilities manager, but on the basis of leveraging the profit-making strength of one department over another. The facilities manager, coming from a cost center, loses his political leverage to the profit-making centers. Space, then, takes a back seat to other managerial concerns.

"The long-term effect of these conflicts and their resolution is a gradual deterioration in quality, function, and image. This arises from the constant relocation of personnel and equipment into less appropriate locations."

That is the first major problem facing the facilities manager in the continuum of change and the evolution of the cycle. A second major problem in the facilities manager's position is an outgrowth of the first. It arises in the area of status reporting. Although charged with the obligation of defining and recording allocations, the facility manager does not have sufficient data on which to establish his base of reporting on reconfiguring furniture or departmental boundries, changing signs and telephones, acquiring new equipment, and the myriad other responsibilities he has.

An often asked question as a company expands is whether new furniture should be purchased or whether enough furniture already exists somewhere in the facility that is unassigned and ready to be reallocated.

Problem magnified in larger corporations

In effect, accurate accounting of precisely what exists within a facility is indispensable. Yet, in a large facility, there is a constant interchange of personnel and functions that magnifies the problem, resulting in a continual expenditure of funds to duplicate equipment, furniture, furnishings, and other support materials for the use of individual departments.

"The need," says Engel, "is very clearly for an accurate accounting of precisely what exists within the facility. That is vital to proper forecasting in order to have an orderly anticipation of growth and change in departments or groups. Subjective projections of department heads and others often amount to little more than corporate wishful thinking, as the gap between original projections and actual data grows wider. What is needed is an improved communication and record-keeping system that will serve facilities management."

Engel and Boshes developed Space Track, a computer-assisted facilities management system. They point out that the system establishes a method by which conditions existing within a facility can be stored in a computer. Such data includes personnel, equipment, furniture, furnishing, support systems, physical space, and every other physical component that makes up a facility. Not only are they physically accounted for, but they are put into the computer by function, location, amount of space required, manufacturer, system, and components. The data includes space standards, as well as space used in joining a family of components.

When promotions, demotions, transfers, or discharges are carried out by the corporation, the system records them. When construction changes are made, they, too, are recorded. Furthermore, all of the changes can be compared to one another and to the original conditions that existed. Thus the computer can detect established trends and conditions for each department, functional unit, and for each type of physical space. This is how projections are made for future space, people, and furnishings needs.

It should be noted that the Space Track system is geared to forecasting on the basis of real changes in the facility. Those changes alert facilities managers about impending problems, so that managers can address themselves to important issues first. Thus, priorities are established. That pool of information subsequently allows future forecasting, since projections can be based on specific activities that have occurred in the facility.

Here is the seven-step system developed by ERD: First is establishment of a Data Base, which is an aggregation of facts, which will function to provide later analysis and reports. It is established with a physical survey—an inventory—as key people walk through the facility and identify every accountable item mentioned above.

From that data file, actual space allocations can be reported on; space allocations and usages compared; usage of furniture and unassigned furnishings determined; departmental boundaries and building profiles established; inventory of space type accumulated and even branch office breakdowns calculated.

SPACE TRACK SYSTEM

Enormous projects fade

Every facilities decision is justified to corporate managers

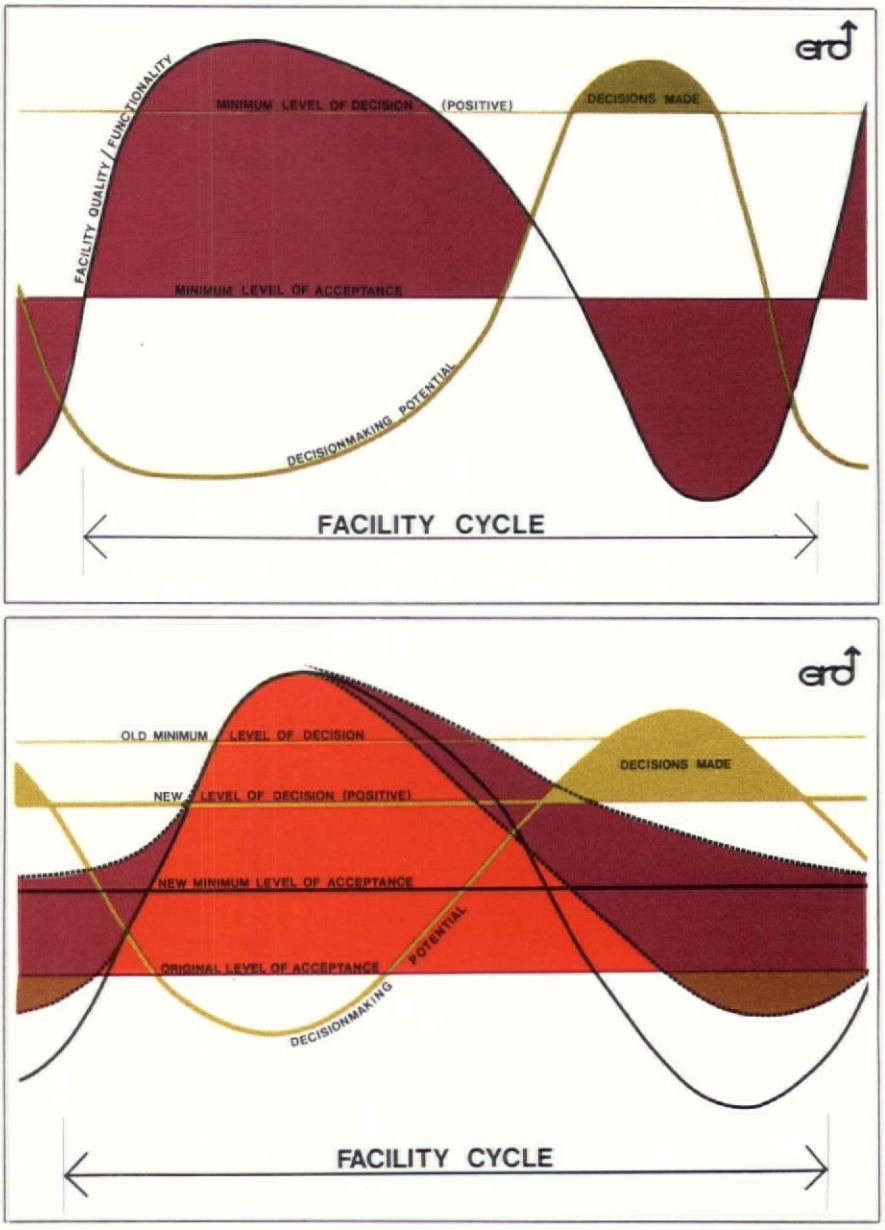
For the facilities planner or the vice president in charge of facilities who has to justify his activities to the board of directors of the financial vice president, a computer data base system makes it possible to justify each and every expenditure, change, and recommendation. Because of the ability to forecast more accurately the needs of the corporation on a day-to-day basis, he is in a position to anticipate the detailed furniture and furnishings requirements on a long-range basis and to allow furniture makers to do their own scheduling rationally, without penalty to the facility planner's needs. In effect, the facilities department's position is strengthened in negotiations with furniture suppliers.

"It becomes quite clear that the impact of a computer management system is the gradual reduction in the need for enormous projects, which are the lifeblood of the service industry," says Boshes. "That includes architects, design firms, and all of the collateral firms that are dependent upon this activity. To take the place of these large-scale, long-lead projects, there will be a trend to small-scale, on-going types of activities. The problem of facilities design will be less of a major effort and more of a maintenance concept. It may be possible for many of the daily, on-going tasks to be performed by expanded, in-house facilities design staffs."

Engel points out that the stultifying effect of rote design tasks on truly creative in-house facilities designers could be demoralizing and result in corporations relying on outside design firms, where new-concept talent can be best employed.

Additionally, the utilization of a computer-directed management system in a facility, with the reduction of big jobs to continuing maintenance, will serve to stretch the facilities cycle even longer than the usual six to seven years. That is because the deterioration phase is inhibited, so that acceptable quality is increased and extended. The facility, consequently, becomes more profitable, with a longer return on original investment, according to Boshes.

Engel summarizes the benefits of computer-aided space planning. He says, "First, systems are easy for designers and draftsmen to use. Non-



Graph at top charts usual decision-making process in relation to deteriorating facility. Note that as facility functionality erodes and decisions start to be made—after conditions reach minimum level of acceptance—it is too late. By the time decisions to effectuate change are made, the facility has fallen to the lowest point of dysfunction. In chart above, which depicts same decision-making process under the influence of the computer space management system, decision-making is speeded up due to timely planning, so that least amount of disruption occurs in the physical facilities during cycle.

SPACE PROGRAMMING AND FEASIBILITY STUDY TERMS

BLOCK DIAGRAMS are scale drawings usually done over a floor plan which depict the area and location of organizational groups, but not the actual offices or circulation.

BUILDING STANDARD is a set of specific materials and equipment which are generally purchased by a building owner for use in the interior space of the building whose quantities are allocated in direct relation to rentable area; these quantities are generally combined into a concession to the tenant within the lease document under the title of Workletter.

CIRCULATION OR ACCESS FACTOR is the percentage amount of square footage required for passage through the offices. It will vary, depending upon building loss factors, configuration of the plan, design intent and the quantity of open or enclosed offices. Different percentages may be assigned to the building itself, space within an organizational group, and space between organizational groups.

EFFECTIVE AREA (see STATISTICAL EFFECTIVE AREA) is that floor area which is actually usable by the occupant of that space. In common terms, the carpeted area.

EFFECTIVE LOSS FACTOR is the calculated percentage of loss between the rent-based rentable area and the usable area (effective area) which tends to be a more accurate measure of the building's efficiency than a landlord's published building loss factor.

EXTERIOR MODULE is the linear distance between repetitive elements on the exterior fenestration of a building, and is generally repetitive within a single column bay.

FEASIBILITY STUDY a study of options which are generated to solve a specific space problem, and which includes personnel and space requirements programming, gaming functions, the generation of alternatives, financial implications of alternatives, real estate option analysis and recommendations designed to focus on decision-making.

GAMING FUNCTIONS the interactive computer function (person to machine) which allows scenarios or "what-if" games to be developed by which a statistical program can be varied to accomplish specific objectives in programming analysis.

GROSS AREA is the sum of the enclosed areas in square feet at each floor level, including cellars, basements, mezzanines and penthouses included within the principal outside faces of exterior walls, not including setbacks.

INTERDEPARTMENTAL CIRCULATION is the amount of square footage required for circulation/access between physically separated organizational units.

NET AREA the sum of all areas in square feet within the perimeter walls measured to the inside faces of the walls and including all columns, ducts, risers and shafts. Exterior spaces and large unique encroachments may be excluded.

OPERATIONAL SURVEYS are forms specifically developed for an individual project to assist in planning facilities by gathering well-ordered and meaningful information about personnel, operations, functions, equipment and interactions.

RENTABLE AREA is the area defined by the building owner on which rent is to be paid, generally measured to the centerline of the exterior glazing and the centerline of the demising walls. It includes proportioned shares of all shared spaces such as corridors, toilets, mechanical, electrical and telephone rooms, building lobby, and may include proportional use of areas such as the cooling tower, boiler room and other spaces as defined by a generally-accepted standard such as BOMA. This calculation may differ from location to location, and depends on the financial return base that a building owner may establish for his building.

SPACE REQUIREMENTS PROGRAM is a complete statement of floor area requirements for all personnel and support functions as determined for a specific point in time.

SPACE STANDARD a determination of the floor area required for the proper functioning of any element included in a space requirements program.

INTERIOR MODULE If it exists within a building it consists of any required alignments of partitions, lighting, mechanical distribution or other fixed elements to a predefined repetitive dimensional aspect such as a ceiling grid, column spacing, underfloor duct spacing and the like.

INTRADEPARTMENTAL CIRCULATION is the amount of square footage required for circulation/access within an individual organizational unit.

LANDLORD'S USABLE AREA is that area determined by a building owner to be usable generally according to a formula such as the BOMA standard, and which is usually measured to the interior face of glass on the exterior wall.

LANDLORD'S USABLE LOSS FACTOR is usually published by the landlord as the building loss factor. It represents the percentage loss between the rentable area and the landlord's usable area.

LANDLORD'S WORKLETTER a document from the landlord which is generally incorporated within a lease which obligates him to provide and install the items generally defined as the building standard.

LOSS FACTOR is the percentage of loss between either rentable/usable or rentable/effective or effective/statistical effective, which is a measure of the efficiency either of a plan of use within a building or the effect of such a percentage loss on a rent lease.

STATISTICAL EFFECTIVE AREA is that effective area which is required for a particular user, based on a statistical program of space requirements.

STATISTICAL LOSS FACTOR is the efficiency test for the layout of a particular set of requirements in a particular location against the programmed requirements for that layout.

SUPPORT SPACE is generally a floor area requirement for a non-personnel function.

Accountability is key computer personnel can be trained to operate them. Work and time are saved in many areas—design creation, report generation, contract documentation, to mention only a few.

"In the past few years, we have come to realize that facilities are one of the fastest growing cost items in the corporate scheme of things. Costs for construction, furniture, furnishings, and services which are performed for facilities, land costs, and building costs as a whole, are rising at an incredible rate.

Perform functions on day-to-day accountability basis

"Corporate management's realization of this has established a whole new climate in the acceptance of scientific management and forecasting for corporate space needs. Financial executives are impressing their boards with the need for early and continuing accountability in space management.

"As a result, there is new emphasis on making facilities decisions and performing facilities functions on a day-to-day basis, in the most expeditious and cost-saving way possible. This protects against rapidly escalating costs and high-cost penalty of reacting to a space crunch, rather than scientifically anticipating it. Computer systems applications applied to facilities problems are both cost effective, as well as logically appropriate."

Engel adds, "Hardware and software systems costs combined approximate the cost of only two or three personnel salaries per year, making them well worth the investment, considering the potential for cost savings that they provide.

When computer processing required large, mainframe computer system usage, application to space management was a costly undertaking. With the advent of dedicated minicomputer systems, however, the cost is so many orders of magnitude less, that usage has become easily justifiable, according to ERD.

"With a completed feasibility study, management has in its hands a unified document that serves as a single source base for all future facilities work. It then can select outside consultants from a position of knowledge and strength. Design professionals can be retained and provided with 'performance specifications' that have been developed from internal sources to reflect all the nuances of the facilities operation. This includes personnel, space, growth, adjacencies, and image.

"With a program statement that is used for space design and architectural bids, the facility manager can intelligently analyze prospective consultants and make a more fully informed decision on space and furnishings.

Leveraging position of facilities manager is vastly improved

"Furthermore, with space requirements derived from the Forecast Program, the client gets an awareness of space needs over time that enables him to establish a real estate acquisitions program that reflects projected requirements. In effect, a leasing/building arrangement can be planned in good time that will embody the most economic alternatives to change."

Boshes adds one important point: "The leveraging position of the facilities manager is radically improved with a computer space management system. He, with feasibility study in hand, functions from a position of strength and is on a stronger footing when operating departments start competing with one another for needed space and facilities.

"In effect, by acting as the implementation arm of the executive group, the facilities management team becomes the central source for all implementation methods, techniques, and procedures. Thus control, measured response, and economical operation accrues to the facility management function as the result of a computer system." □

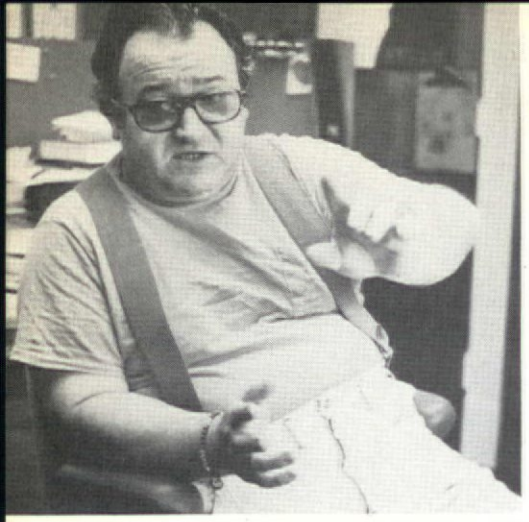
10,000-OFFICE-WORKER STUDY MEASURES JOB SATISFACTION AND PRODUCTIVITY

Buffalo Organization for Social and Technological Innovation, Inc., completing massive survey with answers to long-sought design questions

The first definitive study of productivity and job satisfaction as it is affected by the office environment is being completed by the Buffalo Organization for Social and Technological Innovation (BOSTI) in Buffalo, New York. Headed by Michael Brill, President, and Pamela Clayton, Vice President, BOSTI is a non-profit corporation chartered by the New York State Education Department for educational and research purposes.

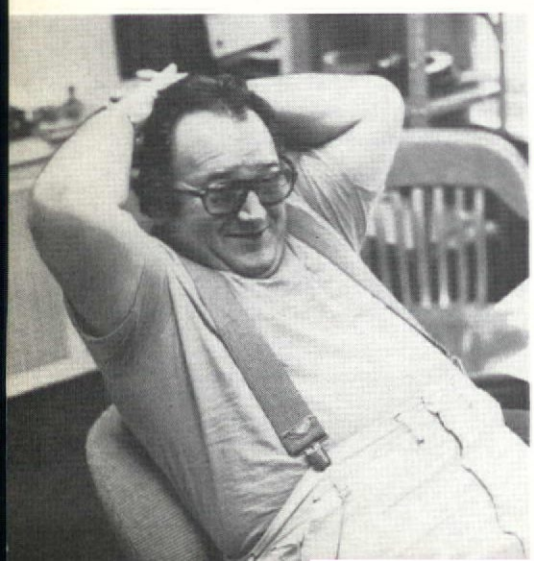
Using a sample made up of 10,000 office workers across America, both in government and the civilian sector, the study utilizes a comprehensive computer program to sort and merge data and then analyzes them in a wide number of meaningful ways. Many of the 20 employees of BOSTI devote themselves to analysis of, and adding information to the data base, which will produce specific answers long sought, but unattainable, by the space design and contract furnishings industry.



"Heretofore, there has been no capacity to demonstrate the influence of environment on job productivity."

"We now have the means to measure whether open plan is better than traditional planning."

"This large data base is providing us with exceptionally reliable information."



OFFICE-WORKER STUDY

Study accuracy is very high because of huge sample

"The sample," says Brill, "is so large and the information so detailed that we will know what characteristics of the physical environment affect productivity and job satisfaction. They should then be considered the most important criteria in making facility design decisions, even over esthetics and other factors. Appearance, up to now, has been one of the most important determinants."

Brill emphasizes that esthetics of course are still very important, but that functional aspects of office design may play a more important role as corporations and government offices try to stem the national drop in office productivity.

BOSTI's team consists of a multidisciplinary group of architects, designers, human factors engineers, and social and environmental psychologists. They are developing data from about 50 public and private sector installations across the country, using a special 56-page questionnaire that was meticulously designed by the team. Development and pre-testing costs for the questionnaire alone was in the area of $45,000.

Most moves to open plan

"Productivity," says Clayton, "is being measured in three ways: through self-report and ratings by supervisors, with both measures rating individuals on the same nine characteristics, and through objective measurement where output can be counted, such as 'keystrokes per day' or 'letters sent.'

"Since a majority of the respondents are moving from traditional office arrangements to 'open plan' offices, it will be possible to measure the impact of such changes in the office environment."

Surveyed three different times

Each of the 10,000 office inhabitants in the sample will be surveyed at three points in time: all will be surveyed about a month before they move; some will be questioned about six weeks after the move; all will be surveyed again six months later. This, according to Brill and Clayton, will provide information on both the short- and long-term impact of environmental changes.

Brill points out that the large number of persons and offices surveyed, the in-depth and wide-ranging questionnaire, the objective measures used for cross-validation, and the tightness of the design of this study, combine to provide detailed "hard" information with which to establish national "norms." They will be used, he says, by specific organizations to measure their own work environments and performances.

Clayton elaborates, "Combined with on-site physical measurements of lighting, speech privacy, visual privacy, distances between people, sight lines, walking distances, and other factors, this large data base is providing us with exceptionally reliable information. The data can be used in the design of new workplaces, in planning changes in existing workplaces, in the management of work and space, and in the design of new products and work systems for the office."

"Grandmother" knowledge prevails

Right now, Brill and Clayton point out, there is a lot of "grandmother" knowledge existant and a lot of assumptions about a wide number of office design factors that have no foundation in scientific fact. That will change with revelations of the study.

As for the potential for product design change that may emerge from the study, Brill says, "Five years from now, based on this study, there will be esthetic and design developments that will clearly be governed by information emerging from this study, as expressed by the office workers surveyed and performances measured."

What, for example?

"Well, lighting is an obvious area," says Clayton, "acoustics is another. Important design decisions will be made about the quality and intensity of light, as well as the source. Perhaps the study will reveal that the ideal light source may be luminescent panels that are part of the systems furniture vertical surfaces or another design configuration that we can't even imagine for the moment.

"The quantified information also deals with people's preferences in terms of color, texture, materials. Decisions will be made about the acoustical environment, which affects a person's productivity. Background noise, which helps give people speech privacy in the open plan, for example, if adjusted too loud can add unnecessary stress."

No prior proof

In addition to quantifying the impact of many aspects of the physical environment on productivity and job satisfaction, this unprecedented study takes into account the moderating effects of privacy needs, communication patterns, job content, employee characteristics, work group norms, management structure, and style and organization quality, Clayton notes.

"Heretofore," Brill continues, "there has been no capacity to demonstrate the influence of the environment on productivity. Design decisions were made largely as a function of esthetics. Designers and managers responsible for the installations frequently contended that productivity increased as the result of "our new offices" and the conclusion was accepted, with no hard evidence of that result.

No real way to evaluate

A more intelligent attempt was made to make the physical environment support the organizations, vis a vis Buro-landschaft—office landscaping. The design was based on factors such as communications and work flow, which helped to determine

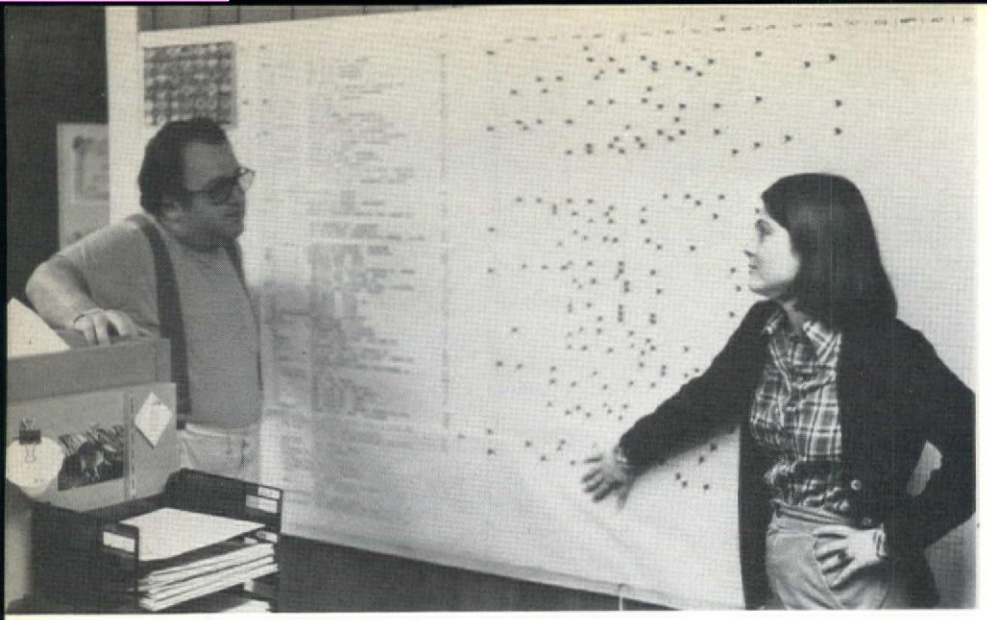
Q-1

Typical questions in 56-page questionnaire.



Brill and Clayton look over current status of GSA offices being surveyed toward end of study.

"Status is a legitimate need!"

"Right now there are a lot of assumptions about offices that have no foundation in fact."

"There has been no way to replicate past design successes."

layout adjacencies and some other factors. But no one still has been able to determine what the effect on productivity or job satisfaction is in scientific terms.

"A program was established, a design derived from it, but there was no way to develop real evidence of its effect on productivity.

"Without crisp feedback there was, in effect, no way to either replicate past design successes, or to design supportive environments."

No one worried about productivity

As for time and motion studies, they only apply to certain kinds of workers, whose productivity can be physically measured, according to Brill. He asks rhetorically, "How do you measure the productivity of knowledge workers, when the results of their efforts do not materialize for weeks, months, or years?"

"In the old days," explains Clayton, "Florence Knoll would design a desk and it would be used in a beautiful office. Whether it increased productivity or not was no one's concern. Measuring productivity just wasn't in people's consciousness. Given our study, we are going to find out a lot of things, including whether or not open office is any better than traditional offices, or a mix of the two, because we have the means to measure."

Brill makes the point that almost nobody in business or government measures productivity of the individual worker. "They measure the bottom line of an organization and the productivity of certain kinds of workers—the clerical people, whose productivity can be measured. Nevertheless, certain open plan designs were done and the claim was that productivity increased. The increase was attributed to the change in environment. Yet they had no way of knowing whether the change in the color of the carpet, going from conventional to open plan, or a more democratic management style effectuated the change. No one knew why there was an increase in productivity, only that there was. Without knowing 'why,' there is no learning, no replication—the fundamental failure."

One hour survey

The survey itself takes one person one hour to finish and includes questions of fact, preference, and attitude. It has many multiple-choice questions and ratings that range from "Disagree Strongly" through five degrees of change to "Agree Strongly," to ratings on a range of from 1 to 7, the higher the better.

There are so many persons in the survey that the degree of accuracy increases to the point where there is great confidence in the reliability of the results, according to Brill. He explains, "In order to get a reasonably trustworthy sample, 250 persons will provide good data—data with reasonably high precision. We have 10,000, or 40 times that sample size. What that means is that we can take slices of the universe that can be correlated and compared to other slices and maintain reliability because of the large numbers with which we are dealing."

Nailing down reality

Clayton makes the point that many things are being studied. "Flexibility, for example," she elaborates, "may be a requirement for some, but not for others. Most managers indicate that about 15 percent of the organization moves annually. From discussions with GSA, it is the same 15 percent, they feel, who move each year. If this is true (we'll find out), the implications are that perhaps two different kinds of furniture systems are needed: one that isn't so flexible and costs less for about 85 percent of the office work force, and one that is most flexible for those that do the moving about.

"Our study may establish certain facts—that status, for example, is a legitimate need. We start with the idea that it is right and that status symbols communicate important information, such as who the decision maker in a department may be.

"Or that employees who expand their open plan offices by edging partitions out into aisleways may actually need the space, rather than coveting it for status purposes."

Many subdivisions for study

The survey content, which was pre-tested to iron out the wrinkles, encompasses numerous divisions, with major headings under: Individual, Interpersonal, Group, and Organization. Under Individual, questions deal with: space, size and shape, ambient conditions that include temperature and lighting, speech privacy and air quality; furniture; and workspace design and use patterns. Under the last are questions dealing with esthetics, human factors, and time spent in various office activities, to mention only three. All told there are 60 major and subsidiary categories that are measured by the all encompassing survey.

Brill and Clayton, Professor of Architecture and Planning and Instructor, respectively, at the State University of New York at Buffalo, are both architects, both extremely knowledgeable and personable. They conceived the study to once and for all provide a measure of the relationship of office environment to productivity and job satisfaction that would be incontrovertible and useful. Requiring 18 months of work, the study will be completed by spring 1980 and the first scientific conclusions will be published by them and provided to the public in appearances now being planned for NEOCON XII and other important design and manufacturer-oriented expositions throughout the country.

More important, the results of their findings may have profound effects on the design of furniture and planning of space clear into the year 2000 and beyond. □

"The data will be used in the design of new products and work systems for the office."

"Once and for all, we will have a measure of the relationship of environment to productivity and job satisfaction."

RAISED FLOORS, AMBIENT LIGHTING PROVIDE EFFICIENT TICKETING OPERATIONS

Pacific Southwest Airlines' new open plan reservation center has pinwheel workstations radiating from centralized computer

Every day, upwards of 35,000 phone calls are received at Pacific Southwest Airline's (PSA) new ticketing facility in San Diego. There they are processed by 250 sales clerks into flight reservations and ticketing information through as many CRTs into the main computer located in the center of the huge open plan. CRTs are the primary tool used by reservation clerks, together with the telephone, to accurately and efficiently process the growing number of seats sold by PSA every year.

When Fischer Office Interiors of San Diego was commissioned to design the new reservation center, it immediately began to wrestle with two fundamental design problems: elimination of veiling reflections on the faces of the CRTs and providing power and communication lines for each station and the computer.

Computer takes center stage

The overall floor plan development was governed by the need for cables from the computer to the CRT consoles to connect over a short distance. The computer was located in the center of the installation which provided for two final stages of planned expansion. Eighteen-in. square carpet tiles on a raised floor lift up for access to cables. Every fifteenth row is glued down to prevent tiles from shifting.

The very nature of the PSA operation made noise and privacy primary concerns. PSA wanted a facility that would meet the social, psychological, and working needs of 250 persons. Early on, therefore, PSA management tapped the most direct source: the employees themselves for needed input. Managers asked employees interested in planning the new building to write a letter with suggestions, as well as reasons for wanting to be on an advisory board. From more than 30 responses, a panel of ten was chosen.

Fischer's designers, headed by Project Manager, René Tinsley, sat down with PSA's selected panel, listened to suggestions, and then worked to integrate them into a workable business environment.

Pinwheels planned for growth

The basic framework for organizing space was the use of jetdesks, workstations set up in a pinwheel configuration containing eight persons, each station set at 45-degree angles to one another. The plan provides room for 110 additional positions.

Since the reduction of glare was a key consideration, indirect ambient lighting was installed above eye level in the hub of each pinwheel for its non-glare qualities. Energy savings from this system amount to 30 percent over conventional fluorescent ceiling fixtures. Illumination is augmented by permitting natural light to enter from two glass perimeter walls. The windows also provide a view of the soaring eucalyptus trees that surround the center.

Contending with noise factor

Fabric-covered acoustical cellulose panels divide the pinwheels into four equal sections. Eight different colors mark the units, tying into the rainbow graphics that cast colorful arcs across one wall. Since reservation clerks do not have assigned seating, they can select a workstation color that fits their mood when they report to work. Pinwheels are designated for smokers and non-smokers. Once seated, agents can adjust posture

Maintaining comfortable noise levels for 250 individuals meant creating a high-ceilinged, carpeted building. Each workstation was outfitted with acoustical panels. Indirect ambient HID lighting was placed in the hub of each workpod for its non-glare qualities.

Supervisors' stations surround the computer center on a raised platform giving maximum visibility of employees within the pinwheels. The only fully enclosed spaces are six administrative offices, each furnished in a different theme.

Training sessions take place in two amphitheaters set back-to-back. Each room is scaled for close communication with three levels of curved desks. The dividing wall folds up for very large conferences.

Fischer's emphasis on employee needs were coupled with an eye on the time clock. Lockers, cafeteria, vending machines, and restrooms were located near the building entrance making the most of user routines and space.

Small, rectangular tables fill the cafeteria designed to look like a restaurant with bricklike flooring and cedar ceiling accents. One round table for 12 offers a larger conversation center. Taking advantage of the mild California climate, a dining area for 32 persons is situated on a landscaped patio. And for those employees seeking refuge from the incessant ringing of phones, a "quiet room" is outfitted in cool, dark colors with comfortable sofas and chairs.

A main entrance and lobby carry out the exterior's California ranch styling with a ceramic tile floor and walls of sisal matting. The room is set in motion with a gleaming curved chrome reception desk, subdued with wood counter and trim. □

OFFICE OF THE '80s: CAN CONTRACT INDUSTRY KEEP PACE WITH DESIGN TECHNOLOGY?

The 1970s marked the beginnings of the electronic office, and the '80s promise to expand electronic technology at lightning speeds. How are contract designer/specifiers and furniture makers coping with these technological leaps and bounds? Can users be adequately prepared for these highly mechanized environments with all due consideration to their personal needs? At a recent roundtable discussion, CONTRACT brought together practitioners from the design, facility planning, manufacturing, and marketing ends of the industry to offer their projections on the office of the eighties.

CONTRACT: Are designers keeping pace with the electronic revolution? What are some of the problems involved in incorporating the growing range of sophisticated equipment into the office?

PAM BALDWIN: My concern is that there is always going to be a big time gap between the development of equipment and the installation of those products in the office environment. Designers can't keep up with the developments of new procedures for communications, paper storage, personnel.

MARGO GRANT: That's true. The electronic systems industry is geared toward technological advancements at a much faster rate than the design community and the furniture marketplace.

CONTRACT: Where will designers obtain the technical know-how for a total systems approach?

BILL PULGRAM: There are a number of sources: the computer manufacturer; equipment supplier; and systems manufacturer. One solution may be for the CRT manufacturer to design and produce the furnishings. I'm looking into the future when technology manufacturers such as IBM and Sperry actually manufacture the furniture.

GRANT: But companies like Sperry, IBM, or Xerox survive on the mystique of the machine. When something is obsolete and the firm says replace it, no one questions the cost of replacement if it's going to improve information processing. But business managers raise a lot of questions if a designer wants to replace a desk that is only two years old. Management thinks furniture should have a life span of 30 years.

CONTRACT: The designers are saying that some of the difficulties lie in product design lagging behind electronic innovation. Do the furniture manufacturers agree?

JOSEPH VIGLIONE: It is difficult to design systems to accommodate the contract industry because the technology of appliances seems to evolve much faster than we can implement them. Marketing life of an average appliance is very unpredictable. By the time we get to the marketplace with furniture or equipment that is a standard, economical item to produce, it's obsolete.

ROBERT VRANCKEN: The manufacturer has to deal with volume. He has to push for the standard, the ultimate end result that will solve X-number of problems to justify volume. Economically, he has no choice. The user is a constantly changing factor in terms of task and size. His needs are going to change. There is no one perfect design.

FRED BELL: Part of the confusion stems from the fact that we're experiencing something akin to the industrial revolution—an industrial engineering revolution. We could all give a definition of an industrial engineer but we could argue all day about the correct name for the professional who is going to perform these tasks for industry in the office. We don't know whether he is a facilities man, office engineer, designer, psychologist, or planner. We really haven't come to grips with it. I would say that we're now on the verge of the office engineering revolution, as compared to the industrial engineering revolution.

EDWARD BARCARMI: Perhaps contract designer/specifiers should get together with manufacturers and plan jointly for the future.

VRANCKEN: We're doing a lot of coplanning now, but the tendency is to come up with a solution that's going to be the answer to everything. Our people are in the computer end, not the furniture business but they are often asked to solve related problems with chairs and systems furniture.

CONTRACT: Does there have to be a single professional identified for the job? Aren't we talking about the need for teamwork from product inception to implementation?

Vrancken

GRANT: Certainly. As we have become more educated, the design team has correspondingly broadened to include acoustical, noise, lighting, food consultants, as well as psychologists. I think perhaps we may need systems consultants as well.

BALDWIN: Management is always a bit taken aback when we come in with a team, yet they present us with a counterpart team.

GRANT: That's true. In the past you dealt with the chairman. Now you have a lot of hierarchal people that are experts in different areas.

VIGLIONE: But the very fact that designers must deal with more than the chairman of the board indicates client firms are developing internal organizations because they are cognizant of the problems.

CONTRACT: Could we be more specific? Just how do you see management responding to changes in the office?

VRANCKEN: There is going to be more emphasis on communications. The Steelcase/Harris Poll ["The Steelcase National Study of Office Environments: Do They Work?," conducted by Louis Harris & Associates] is a perfect example. Employees are demanding to have something to say or at least be consulted about their environments. We ought to take a message from that because there are demands from maintenance, movers, the individual who changes the lights, and from the person who plans the space again. These talents must communicate directly to one another instead of through interfaces, i.e., a designer interfaces between the manufacturer and the user. Many times this leaves a lot to the imagination.

Grant

Direct communications stressed

BELL: The attitudes expressed in the Steelcase/Harris Poll are going to force management to respond to the intelligent, dedicated people that work in the office, not just to be nice guys, but also because the bottom line is being affected. Management can't look at its investment in terms of how much furniture it is buying, but how it is reducing operating costs to run a more efficient business.

CONTRACT: Do you see management's parameters for decision-making changing? Is money still being spent on status symbols?

GRANT: We're still confronted with managements that think in terms of where you put the money. No one wants to lose status. Status equals dollars in your budget—where you allocate it and where you get the square footage. From management's perspective, you spend more money at the top of the heap.

BarCarmi

PULGRAM: But there are very few people at the top. It's just a drop in the bucket in the overall cost of a corporation. There's probably less concern with money at executive levels nowadays. Executives are becoming very anti-status.

BARCARMI: True, there are fewer top management positions in a corporation than clerical or auxiliary staff. From my experience, we haven't had many projects where the client has recommended that a secretary should have 35-sq. ft. minimum or has asked us to reduce square footage to fit a budget.

GRANT: I tend to be a bit cynical about this but I think one of the big influences is the financial man at the company making bottom-line decisions. If he can get esthetics with a lower bottom line, fine. If they don't, they won't.

VIGLIONE: In many cases, a project starts with some very nice ideas. But the closer it gets to the bottom line, we find that something has to be sacrificed because the job was under estimated or oversold. In the initial stages of the project, we tend to pre-condition the customer to accept certain cost factors. Management goes to its board to get approval to spend a certain amount of money. When we get into the project, we're limited to just that cost figure. It's difficult for management to go back to the board on a project that's been christened and say, "We didn't figure in this or that or a new CRT with microwave—whatever—is available." The facilities person tells us, "We're at a point of no return. I really can't go back to the very board that grades my management capabilities and ask for more funds."

CONTRACT: How do we distinguish management's responsibilities to the user from the design team's responsibilities to the user?

VRANCKEN: That's a problem area. I think a whole new technology is required for management planning. An office is not like a factory where once you turn on a new machine, if it's designed to produce 50 more units than the last machine, it will. In the office, if you design a space to be 25 percent more efficient, it doesn't necessarily happen. When management doesn't see concrete results, it blames bad space design. Management doesn't understand that as designers and planners, all we do is create the potential for that 25 percent more efficiency. It has to be talented enough to demand the extra productivity that employees are capable of delivering.

Fallucchi, Vrancken, Viglione

CONTRACT: But in order to achieve or stimulate that added productivity, the user needs to feel he is a part of the decision-making process, isn't that correct?

BELL: I think these problems existed at the beginning of the industrial revolution also. The first few tries didn't always work out because you are dealing with something that is a real change in the mental process. I don't think we've started to communicate properly. Management has never gone back and asked workers, "What do you need to make your workplace better?" In most companies, the boss still dictates square footage and furnishings for each person.

CONTRACT: This comes back to the Steelcase/Harris Poll which ascertained that people were not properly briefed, and had they been fully briefed, they would have been more amenable to or accepting of something that was going to benefit them.

VRANCKEN: It goes both ways. We may not be adequately briefing them, but at the same time, we're not asking the proper questions of the individuals. Then you've got two problems, one person will tell you something is a "need" and another is going to tell you something is a "want." Management has to find out which is which.

BELL: The business community has begun to realize there are worthwhile changes to be made in the office. However, we have hardly begun to address those challenges. The office really exists to perform tasks. If you list the products produced in our very technocrat society for the improvement of the environment, you will find all kinds of gorgeous fabrics, marvelous furnishings systems. You'll find people understand the use of color and noise control. You'll also find a few social science studies, one of which is the Steelcase/Harris Poll, about the kinds of things people need and want in an environment. But you'll find almost nothing that relates to doing the task.

VRANCKEN: I agree. The user is not communicating with the furniture makers and the user continues to pile paper on the floor instead of using the new $400 cabinet next to him. We've had programmers thinking about this for 20 years and no one has really identified paper flow problems.

GRANT: You put a price tag on the cabinet, but not on the equipment. You start identifying so much with your investment.

VRANCKEN: I'm not talking about equipment here. The equipment is paper. The people I'm talking about process paper.

VIGLIONE: But that's becoming a smaller percentage of people in the business environment and that's the problem. Most design problems are established at top management levels. Executives say this is the image they want for their company and this is filtered down through the rest of the system.

CONTRACT: Are you saying the personnel mix is changing?

VIGLIONE: Yes. There are more analytical people. Ten years ago, businesses had attorneys on retainer. Today they have internal legal staffs that are as large as reputable law firms. These people have to be accommodated. Their decision-making processes depend, to a great extent, on the material and statistics that are provided by the computer. But again, these people are in a totally different environment. Eighty percent of their day is spent in verbal communication. Most of them are professionals so that their psychology is a little different from the typical office worker, a key puncher, or verifier, that sits at a piece of equipment.

CONTRACT: Are you saying some of the technological advances coming up are not going to treat the problem?

VRANCKEN: No. The attempts to resolve these problems are more serious than ever. It's just that we're still uncovering the problems that will dictate the direction we will take, such as the paper problem, or the CRT and its angles, heights, and keyboard reflections. We need to functionally work on a design solution as opposed to esthetically working on a design solution, recognizing that someone in management must be involved all the time regardless of whether it's the design or manufacturing end.

CONTRACT: Let's take an historic glance back. Quickborner team's open plan was an organizational idea to improve the work process with heavy lines of communication. Then there was a remarkable departure with Bill Pulgram's McDonald's headquarters in Oak Brook, Ill., moving away from stringent rules and treating the status of things a bit differently from environmental concerns. Development from that point has been to increase efficiency as well as address the esthetics and human aspects of the environment. Is that a correct interpretation?

Viglione

VIGLIONE: When we look at our responsibilities to the marketplace, we are looking at them from executive to mid-management, in lieu of the more clerical types dependent on sophisticated machinery. We must give added consideration to the esthetic and human environment and how this effects the individual, his productivity and attitude. We try to satisfy the needs of personnel at all levels, but in most of our experience to date with major clients, there is an increasing emphasis on people in analytical positions, marketing, financial, and legal departments. Status, comfort, and environment are the greatest source of concern and criticism for these persons.

PULGRAM: There's a lot of room for improvement. The planner, manufacturers, and all of us could stand helping each other. I think the challenge is for the computer and furniture manufacturer and the designer and the lighting engineer to become a total unit. The problem lies in the fact we're sort of obsolete before we get going. This is particularly true for electronic equipment which is just busting out all over. We need to jointly try to solve those problems au current, as they happen, and not lag behind. □

SOUND LEVELS ACCURATELY PREDICTED DURING INITIAL DESIGN STAGE

Bolt Beranek & Newman, Cambridge, developed OPLAN, a computer program that performs thousands of calculations in mere minutes to predict speech privacy while assessing many design options and cost trade-offs

Guesswork, no matter how educated, can be eliminated in determining acoustical needs by the use of the computer. This fast-growing tool of the '80s performs thousands of calculations with speed, ease, and accuracy.

With it, space planners/designers can predict—even during early design phases—the degree of acoustical privacy in offices, both open and enclosed. Space designers are also provided with great flexibility in quickly exploring all possible design options and cost trade-offs.

The computer program that can make such acoustical predictions is called OPLAN. It was developed by the consulting firm of Bolt Beranek and Newman Inc. (BBN), Cambridge, Mass., specialist in acoustics.

Major problem: intrusive speech

In any office environment, intrusive speech is the major source of acoustical distraction and annoyance. Any intruding noise may be annoying, but intelligible conversation is inevitably more distracting.

In determining acoustical privacy, says BBN, it is important to realize that the level of the background noise (sometimes called ambient sound) that masks out intruding noise from the next room is just as important as the value of the noise reduction that occurs between adjacent offices.

What matters, says BBN, is the loudness of the intruding voice as compared to the loudness of the background noise in the listener's office.

For instance, a person may no longer be aware of conversation intruding from an adjacent office once the air conditioning system is turned on. This relationship is clearly illustrated by the following formula: Acoustical privacy = Noise Reduction + Background Noise.

Thus, a 5 decibel (dB) increase in the level of the background noise can compensate for a 5 dB decrease in noise reduction. The apparent acoustical privacy thereby achieved will remain unchanged (see Figure 1).

BBN draws this example: In an open plan arrangement, a designer might improve speech privacy between two workstations by increasing the height of a screen barrier by one foot, to reduce the loudness of the voice intruding from the adjacent desk by 5 dB. However, without increasing the barrier height at all, an equal improvement in speech privacy can be achieved by raising the level of the background noise by 5 dB.

Five factors for speech privacy

In both enclosed and open plan office layouts, provision of satisfactory speech privacy depends on five basic factors:

1) Loudness of talker's voice.

2) Acoustic character of talker's surroundings.

3) Noise reduction between enclosed offices—or sound-attenuation between open plan workstations.

4) Level of background noise at listener's position.

5) Degree of privacy required.

Initially, BBN developed a worksheet to analyze these factors to predict speech privacy between workstations. It became quickly apparent, however, that only a computer could efficiently perform the thousands of calculations required to assess the impact of the many options that must be considered in the design of open plan offices.

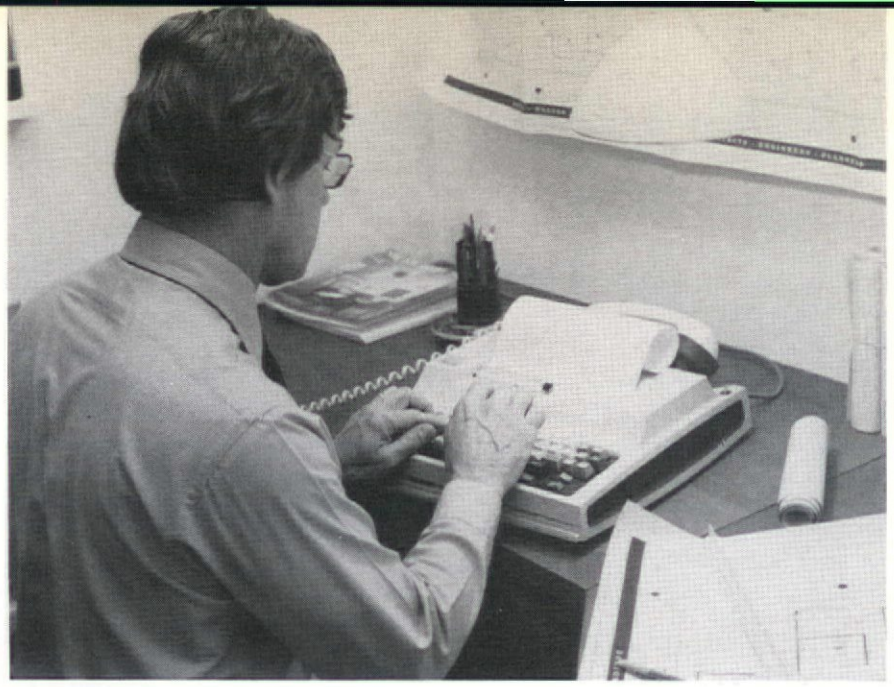
Only in this way would the designer have the freedom to review, with adequate speed and accuracy, the acoustical implications of each design decision.

In other words, the designer can determine in a cost-effective manner how great the improvement in speech privacy can be because of the use of design options. Such options can include acoustical ceiling material, wider spacing between workstations, or a 6-inch higher screen barrier between workstations.

By means of its OPLAN computer program, BBN is able to determine accurately the sound drop-off or attenuation between workstations in any open plan configuration.

A prediction of the degree of acoustical privacy achieved is possible because the program takes into account:

- Range of anticipated speech loudness levels.
- Length of each sound path, whether direct or reflected, by which sound of talker's voice travels to listener's position.



Parker Hirtle, developer of BBN's OPLAN, uses a portable terminal tied into BBN's Cambridge computer center by telephone.

- Attenuation of sound as it travels between workstations in a straight line, or is deflected around partial-height barriers, or is reflected off surfaces faced with a variety of finish materials.
- Multiple reflection and diffraction paths that occur in many open plan furniture systems.
- Anticipated level of background (or ambient) noise at listener's position.

All calculations performed by BBN's OPLAN computer program are made in each of the five octave bands of frequency that contribute significantly to speech intelligibility.

OPLAN offers options

The data base of BBN's program includes detailed acoustical information on a wide variety of speech levels and typical ceiling and wall finish materials.

The consultant responds to the computer's questions about these design elements; he specifies layout dimensions, anticipated orientation of talkers (since the human voice is a directional sound source), ambient sound levels, barrier sizes, and other pertinent information.

He can also type in any additional sound-absorption, sound-isolation, or ambient sound-level data that are not already included in the data base.

For instance, when the designer is asked to select a ceiling material, if he wishes to use a material not included in the list of options displayed by the computer, he can respond to the question by indicating his desire to insert sound-absorption values "specified by octave bands."

This response is made by selecting Option 8 in the list of proposed ceiling materials (see case history computer run that follows). This selection will prompt the computer to ask the designer to type in the sound-absorption values for the alternate ceiling material. These new data, available from the manufacturers of ceiling materials, are immediately incorporated into the program.

During the design analysis process OPLAN asks questions in a logical sequence, frequently giving the user the option to reconsider previous responses. A user may complete detailed analysis of a given layout in minutes. Subsequently, he can rapidly explore the effect of further design changes.

Privacy by Articulation Index

The OPLAN program's response to each open plan layout analysis is given in terms of an Articulation Index (AI), a numerical rating developed by Bell Telephone labs that indicates the intelligibility of the intruding speech signal.

AI is a number between zero and one used to indicate relative levels of speech intelligibility obtainable under any set of design conditions. It is derived by comparing the level of the intruding speech signal (the voice) to the level of the background noise at the listener's position.

Ample information on the subjective reaction of listeners to intelligibility of intruding speech supplements objective acoustical measurements. This information has been correlated with the AI, allowing subjective responses to be predicted on the basis of AI ratings (see Figure 2).

Finish materials in data base

A difference of 0.10 in the AI represents a difference of approximately 3 dB in the relative level of the intruding speech signal vs. the background noise level.

Thus, if a typical OPLAN analysis indicated that the degree of speech privacy between two workstations is equivalent to an AI of 0.15, this AI will drop to 0.05 if the level of the intruding voice can be reduced by 3 dB or if the background noise level is increased by 3 dB.

Three dB is about the smallest change in sound level that generally can be detected. Therefore, it is apparent how slight the margin can be between acoustical success and failure.

Computer finds weak links

The computer types out the degree of acoustical privacy achieved with any proposed layout in terms of the Articulation Index number. This AI number is based on the consultant's responses to the computer's questions about all the design elements involved. As each design change is made, the computer recalculates the AI thus achieved.

In addition, the computer points out the next acoustically weak link and suggests further design alternatives that should be considered, allowing the user to evaluate the consequences of each subsequent design decision.

In this way, the consultant and client can evaluate cost trade-offs in the early design stage. Working side by side with a portable terminal, they are able to review many options in a few minutes to develop a basic design approach for an entire floor or building.

Finally, when all of the typical, or most critical, one-to-one relationships have been studied and modified to meet the acoustical design goal—and this process may involve only a dozen typical workstation layouts in a 50,000 sq. ft. floor area—the computer provides a finished copy of a report that summarizes the design decisions made during the analysis.

To illustrate the OPLAN process, an annotated printout of a past project is reprinted on the pages that follow. □

BBN DEFINES TERMS

SOUND LEVEL
Sound is a mechanical energy that moves from a source (voice, musical instrument) to listener as tiny oscillations of pressure, just above and below atmospheric pressure. Sound can be distinguished by loudness, tone, pitch. Loudness and pitch variations of some sounds, such as speech sounds, are recognized as having certain meanings.

In this article, it will be assumed that level, volume, and loudness are synonymous when they refer to sound. Sound and noise are also synonymous terms, although noise is most often used to refer to an undesirable sound.

DECIBEL (dB)
Unit to define loudness of a sound. It is derived by comparing intensity of a given sound to that of the minimum audible sound. Since decibel level is derived on a logarithmic scale, a large increase in sound power output will be reflected in a change of only a few decibels.

NOISE REDUCTION (NR)
Refers to differences in sound level between two fully enclosed spaces. Example: If talker's voice is 65 dB loud in an office and voice penetrates an adjacent office at a level of 40 dB, noise reduction between offices is 25dB (65–40 = 25dB).

SOUND ATTENUATION
Drop-off sound between two locations. Amount of sound attenuation that occurs between open plan workstations depends on distance between them, as well as shielding provided by barrier screens and effectiveness of sound-absorbing finish materials (carpet, acoustical tile) on ceiling, floor, and surrounding wall surfaces.

TRANSMISSION LOSS (TL)
The diminution in sound level that occurs as sound is transmitted through a barrier. If sound energy is reduced by 20 dB when sound passes through a plywood panel, the TL of panel is said to be 20 dB. To differentiate between terms TL and NR, think of TL as representing the sound isolating property of the partition itself, whereas the NR (noise reduction) between two offices will, in addition, depend on the acoustic character of the listener's room. Sound energy transmitted through a given partition will remain constant; level of sound in listener's room will be lower if that room is generously treated with sound-absorbing materials. Thus, NR measured between two rooms may be 25 dB, even though TL value of partition is only 20 dB.

CASE HISTORY: COMPUTER REVEALS SPEEDY SOUND SOLUTION

In a newly completed open plan installation, confidential privacy was lacking between the principals' offices. These offices were located along the perimeter of the open plan layout to afford them the best view of the bay. Shortly after move-in, the occupants unfortunately realized that conversations in these offices could be easily understood in adjacent spaces. BBN consultants were asked to review the job.

Using the OPLAN computer program to predict the degree of speech privacy in the area, the consultants then made acoustical measurements of existing facilities. They used a loudspeaker sound source that simulated the directional characteristics of the occupants' voices, and made sound attenuation measurements between open plan offices.

The consultants also made mock-ups of possible changes in office layouts and finish materials that were being considered. Sound measurements were then made of these mock-ups.

Among mock-up variations: Where partial-height barriers that separated office areas along the perimeter of the building stopped several feet short of the exterior wall, BBN consultants erected a temporary barrier of ½-in.-thick plywood to extend these partitions out to the windows.

These on-site measurements were later compared to the predictions made with the OPLAN program, which had incorporated all of the pertinent information on finish materials and layout dimensions.

Sound attenuation measurements of existing conditions made in the offices matched those modeled by the computer program to within ± 1 dB.

Correlation between on-site measurements made using the temporary plywood barrier extensions and the same design changes as modeled by the computer was similarly close. These high correlations between actual sound measurements and the results of the computer run confirmed the accuracy of the computer modeling technique.

The following computer run reproduction was used to model existing conditions and to study the impact of the design changes being considered for improving speech privacy between offices. (Text typed out by the computer terminal is followed by consultant's responses in italics.)

This case history indicates the importance of being able to predict the impact of various design decisions during the planning stage. A review of the proposed design, using techniques that accurately model the final layout, can often prevent the need for expensive and awkward remedial measures in the future.

In this case, the owner decided to incorporate the sound masking system and the glass extension of the partitions out to the window wall, but chose to live with a normal instead of a confidential degree of privacy for conversational-level speech.

The design options that could have provided confidential privacy were either: 1) the extension of the 7-ft.-high barriers to full height, with glass; 2) the installation of a more efficient sound-absorbing ceiling.

Neither of these options was seriously considered because of the great cost involved, although the use of a better ceiling would not have added to the cost had it been considered during the design phase. □

BBN EXPLANATORY NOTES

◄ 1. At appropriate point, consultant is asked if he wishes to use "DESIGN" TL (Transmission Loss; see box for definition) values for screen barrier occurring between two workstations. When computer raises question of sound reflection off barriers or wall surfaces, consultant will also be asked if he wishes to consider using the "DESIGN" ABSORPTION EFFICIENT values for finish materials on these acoustically treated surfaces. These barrier TL and absorption coefficient values are part of program's data base and, at consultant's request, are displayed at beginning of computer run. Subsequently, if consultant wishes to use other barrier TL and absorption coefficient values (obtainable from materials manufacturers), consultant may reject the "design" values offered and type in alternate values, for each of the five octave bands. Single number STC and NRC values do not suffice.

"DESIGN" ambient values offer consultant background noise level, suitable in terms of its loudness and frequency spectrum, that can be provided by a sound masking system. If, instead, consultant wishes to use different level of background noise, he can type in appropriate octave band levels in response to computer's request for this information. Finally, computer reminds consultant what AI values are required to achieve confidential or normal speech privacy.

EDP PROGRAM: NEWEST TOOL FOR PRACTICAL PLANNING

Design professionals, dealers, and facility managers are now being offered software programs by systems furniture manufacturers to facilitate space planning, inventory controls, and space management.

by RICHARD ZOEHRER, Associate Editor

If space planners reluctant to face the computer base their fear on prohibitive costs and complex operation, they can put those fears to rest. Not only are computers getting less costly, but also furniture manufacturers have developed software programs that are simple to use.

The impact that computers and electronic chip technology will have on office design of the eighties is not dissimilar to that of the industrial revolution. As computer uses multiply daily, routine tasks are shifted from the designer into the tireless memory of the computer.

Systems furniture manufacturers are now offering a variety of computer software programs for space management to the contract design community. Capabilities encompass development of space planning, remodeling, renovation, space allocations, billing, inventory of entire lines, and inventory costs.

Time-savings produced by computers have spurred manufacturing companies to develop their own software programs for customers. Software, or the method of feeding information into the computer, can be general, specific, or highly personalized, depending on individual hook-ups.

Computer can be used three ways

Three basic ways to utilize a computer are: a service bureau, time sharing, or purchase your own. A service bureau owns its own computers. Input is from forms of its own design, filled in by the client. Restrictions lie in the fact that service bureau programs are general and not specific to a designer's or client's own requirements.

Time sharing companies also have their own computers. With the aid of a terminal the user communicates directly with the computer. Since mainframe computers are expensive, most programs are time shared.

Ownership of a computer is getting easier, due to development of lower cost mini-computers. Users are thus able to maintain confidential information in-house and tailor programs to specific needs. Until that time, however, there are programs on the market that offer the user software and computer systems for a variety of results.

Software provides economic result

Introduced by Herman Miller's Professional Services Group last spring, a new software program was first offered to its furniture dealers and thereafter to professionals involved in facility design, including architects, space planners, dealers, specifiers, and designers.

This service was developed to optimize work processes in the office or institutional environment with furniture, equipment, service, and information.

Included in Herman Miller's software package is the Communication Interaction Analysis program, the Activity Equipment Analysis program, and the Facility Operations Support system.

Result as the end product

"Several of our services, such as Project Planning and Product Installation, are available from sources other than Herman Miller," says Edward R. Simon, Vice President Operations. "The important thing is not who provides these services, but that they are employed to assure optimum results for the client. The transfer of our software capability will be a continuing process, bringing Herman Miller and the professional community into an ever closer working relationship in the future."

The company feels that its aim is to deliver a result which becomes the product. Although the responsibility to help the customer solve work environment problems is important, the company's primary concern must be with work as a process.

"Process," says Simon, "rather than mere objects has always been our focus. Design for us has never been a means of imposing form on end products; it has always been a process with which to approach problems of various kinds."

Primary objectives encompass: increasing functional effectiveness and

Computerized projections are individualized efficiency of customer facilities; assuring cost-effectiveness, so that customers spend only what is needed to solve their problems; assuring that customers do not sacrifice long-term efficiency and effectiveness just to lower initial costs; and assuring that customer facilities remain functional on a continuing basis.

Plot management, space planning

Users connecting their terminals into Herman Miller's computer can avail themselves of the following software programs:

1. Communication Interaction Analysis. This program provides planners and management with a graphic depiction of the actual communications network with an organization. All workers fill out a questionnaire listing the individuals with whom they work regularly and answer questions on the nature of their communications with these people (e.g., "Do you confer with this individual on topics relative to your own particular task prior to taking action on them?") Responses are computer-sorted and compared to develop a network of the actual communication links in the organization. These links are then organized into sets, (individual and departmental) and linkages are graphically portrayed by the planner. Thus, the CIA program provides a basis for determining spatial relationships within a facility. It has also been found to be an insightful management tool, giving executives an x-ray view of the real decision-making network as opposed to the assumed hierarchical chain of command.

2. Activity Equipment Analysis. Allowing workers to become "architects of their own space, this program asks each employee the type of work he performs, how and when it's done, and the type of supportive equipment required. Responses are again computer-sorted and compared to develop equipment requirements (such as storage, display, work surfaces, and conference space) to support tasks performed.

In both analyses, the computer makes it practical for dealers, design professionals, and facility managers to see to it that all workers are given a chance to provide input. Because problem evaluation methods are so time-consuming and unwieldy, all too often only supervisors are queried.

3. Facility Operations Support. Herman Miller's latest software package is available to users, dealers, and space planners who maintain an ongoing responsibility for the management of facilities. The need for corporations to manage furniture systems as efficiently as they manage other corporate systems is what spurred development of this program. The goal is to make its customers' facilities cost effective by enabling whoever is in charge to maximize cash flow while minimizing inventory investment.

"It may seem quixotic for Herman Miller to try to reduce customers' inventory of our furniture systems," says Warren Koepf, Director of Herman Miller's Professional Services Group, "but it's sound business for us as well as for them, especially over the long run. Up to now, facility managers of large companies lacked control. They've been unable to maximize use of furniture components they own, and too often too much is in storage. They also lacked the information needed to order only required additional components."

Reports account for every item

Project Planning and Facilities Maintenance (two interrelated computer-aided programs) generate accurate reports showing every component required, how many are already owned but not used, where they're located, how many are ordered but not yet received, and so forth. Reports provide key information such as product number, description, quantity, location, condition, current status, key dates, and costs.

"This information," says Koepf, "allows facility managers to become curators of their own destiny. It permits them or their consultants to maximize utilization of in-use furniture and to exercise definitive project planning and control. Installation costs, inventory investment, and clerical work can all be reduced at the same time."

Dealers and designers can choose to act as users and apply the system for their clients. The FOS system thus provides them with an opportunity to expand their level of service and promote expansion.

Savings projected for open plan

A program offered by the Westinghouse architectural systems division (ASD) is a computerized survey called 'PROOF—short for Projected Return on Open Office Facilities. It is provided without charge to businesses. Interested parties fill out a simple questionnaire with a Westinghouse ASD representative, and this information is then entered into a computer program. The program was created by a team of Westinghouse systems furniture experts, independent architects, and consultants.

A printout is then furnished showing side-by-side cost projections of the systems furniture versus conventional furniture resulting in the calculations for return on investment and break-even.

Benefits of the computerized cost projection program are explained by Westinghouse ASD marketing manager Michael Ferrara: "We're offering this program without charge to all paper-intensive business to show the savings projections that companies can expect year after year through the use of systems furniture. Every computerized projection is individualized, because projections are made using customer's own data provided on PROOF questionnaires."

Data can be gathered in a few minutes by talking to a few key people familiar with a company's office arrangement, business operation, and re-arrangement costs.

In addition to PROOF's comparison printout, the program also shows the savings that can be realized through tax effect of depreciation and investment tax credit. "This tax saving comes from the fact that the entire open office system may be subject to a shorter depreciation period than a fixed-wall office," adds Ferrara. Open plan furniture and its lighting, as well as it's other furniture components, are often eligible for investment tax credit.

Another computer program being pioneered by Westinghouse is its CADD—computer assisted drafting and design—system. CADD can provide engineering and product design drawings, product analysis, and layout drawings. Designer's sketches are entered into the computer system through a CRT keyboard, and later emerge as perspective drawings in a fraction of the time it would take to do them in the conventional manner. Prospective potential for designers and space planners is vast. CADD can eliminate much of the time-consuming detail work facing designers, thus speeding up routine tasks and freeing the designer for faster creative work. There is also the possibility of service programs, which would be developed to serve designers rather than compete with them.

Software program from scratch

Steelcase has been working on a software program for the past nine months. Rather than adapt existing space planning systems to a computer software program, the company is starting from scratch.

The program, which will not be out for approximately another six months, will go beyond furniture placement.

"A computer program should not be limited only to the use of floor space," says Chuck Halterman, Sales Promotion Supervisor for Steelcase, "but should also encompass such office considerations as ceiling management, air movement, raceways, acoustical control, and masking sound systems." □

POWER TO THE OPEN PLAN PEOPLE —IN MINUTES!

Flat, multi-channel wire for both power and communication offers super fast installation under carpet tiles

With the continued rapid expansion of the open plan in office design, the space design industry has sought better ways to access power and communications.

Flat wire, as the newest case in point, was the outgrowth of space-age technology. It offers a thin answer to a fat problem—fast access to power and communication lines under mobile carpet squares. Only ⅛-in. thick and carrying up to 10 wires, new flat cables are easy to install and lend themselves to fast changes typical of open plan offices.

With the proliferation of power-eating appliances—computers, CRTs, word processing equipment—the design industry is responding with increased use of raised floors and other wire management products that contribute to the quick change capability.

Heretofore, fast changes in open plan and systems furniture arrangements were either accompanied by horrendously expensive floor wiring schemes—a monument every four square feet—or the time-consuming chore of accessing underfloor ducts.

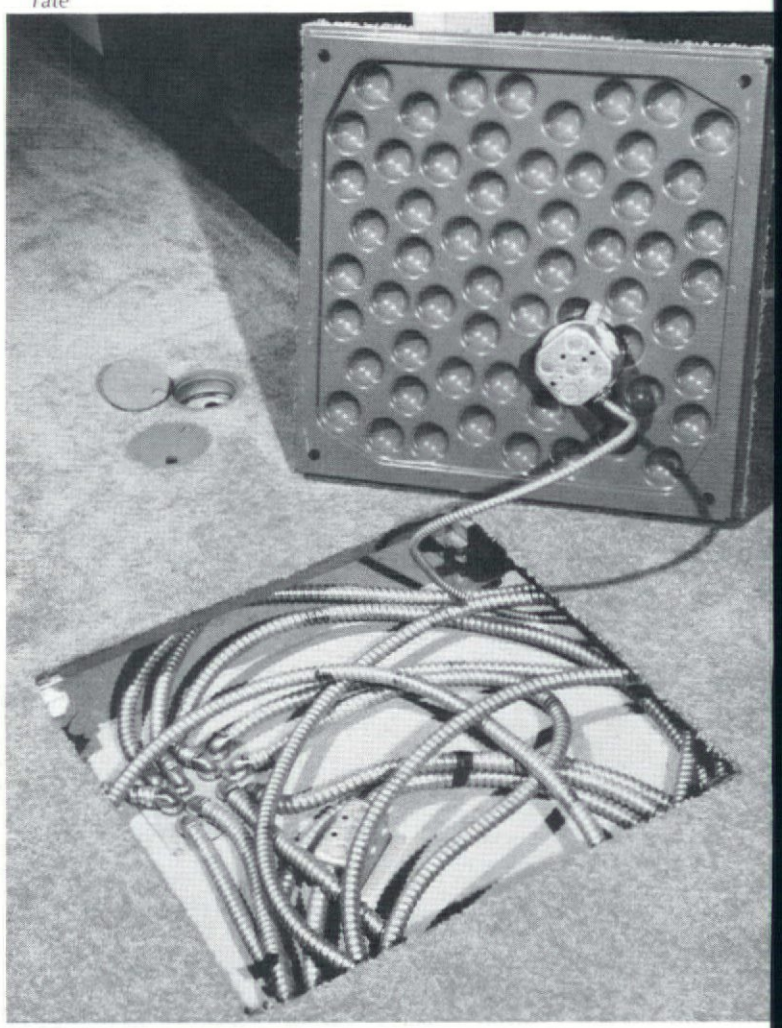
In 1975, major manufacturers were invited by the National Aeronautic & Space Administration (NASA) to participate in a special project in which they pooled research and technologies. The result was flat cable systems, an innovative method of distributing electrical and telephone wires with an exceptionally thin cable. Flat cables are simply laid over existing floor surfaces and require no in-concrete cutting.

Easy accessibility to these systems is provided by carpet tiles, since only the desired squares can be removed to facilitate wiring change. In small enclosures, such as private offices and conference rooms, undercarpet wiring does not require carpet tiles. However, for the open office, carpet tiles are preferrable. Under Article 328 of the National Electrical Code, if the area is to be served by flat AC power wiring, carpet tiles are required.

"There has been tremendous growth in the acceptance of modular carpet tiles for use in landscape office areas," says Richard M. Stein, Vice President Sales, Commercial Floor Systems Division, Collins & Aikman. "Now with flat cable communication and power systems suitable for both new construction as well as renovation, carpet tiles will certainly become an essential part of that building's interior specifications."

The major concept of carpet squares is that they are switchable. Since floor areas receive wear in different areas, and not evenly all over, the ability to rotate tiles prolongs carpet life.

Tate



When they first were introduced several years ago, some carpet tiles were not engineered to the close tolerances needed in heavy traffic areas. Today, however, carpet tiles offer careful design that lends itself to good maintenance, appearance, and underfloor accessibility.

Here is a cross-section of new power accessing products and flooring that promote fast, easy changes that complement the open plan design techniques. □

Tate Architectural Products, Inc.'s Tateway system installs in all types of buildings, provides a finished floor. Total space beneath is used as a raceway for electrical, mechanical, communication, and other services with 100 percent accessibility and flexibility. Tate's Estate Carpet Line is available in 10 styles, 91 colors. Layout of partitions, workstations, task lighting, etc., is unrestricted by fixed grid or power outlets. Relocation of services can be accomplished in minutes by in-house personnel. The steel floor panel, Mod 800, comes in five strengths, ranging from computer-room heavy to general-construction commercial. Five understructures are offered. All systems are height adjustable for leveling; available in finished floor heights as low as four inches. Circle No. 209.

Power-T-Duct system from 3M Company's Electro-Products Division utilizes a series of extruded aluminum raceways that are factory attached to the main runners of a T-bar suspended ceiling. Receptacles at customer specified intervals permit the plugging in of ceiling fixtures of Communi-Power poles which deliver power and telephone sources to floor locations. Raceways come in 10 or 12 ft. lengths. Total switching flexibility is available for energy saving operation during the life of the building. Three-wire or four-wire receptacle systems permitting one- or two-circuit configurations are available. Other switching arrangements, including half-lighting, are possible. All receptacles and power heads are color-coded to prevent erroneous insertion. Circle No. 210.

Modular carpet from Lees Carpets, called Surfaces, is both heavy in face weight and light in total weight, offering optimum combination of durability and ease of installation and handling. Modules lift free to afford access to power and telephone cables buried in subfloor ductwork. They are held in place with a pressure-sensitive adhesive, specially formulated for the carpet system. Offered in 600-mm square modules of balanced twist yarn construction utilizing soil-hiding Antron nylon staple. Construction prevents entrapment of moisture beneath finished installation. Heat-set, 2-ply construction tiles are offered in 10 colors. Circle No. 211.

Cross section of floor shows how carpet tiles from Interface Flooring Systems provide instant access to undercarpet utilities. Tiles require no general use of adhesive, lift up easily, and are fusion-bonded. 14 patterns are available in Interface's collection of in-stock prints, which offer a mix and match selection as well as directional symbols to turn a flooring system into a communications medium. New line of colors and new collection of stripes are now available in company's velvet finish Debron carpet tile series. Circle No. 212.

Chan-L-Wire System from Wiremold Co. is a specially constructed, 600 V, 4-conductor, 3-phase flat cable assembly. Adding a series of taps, this assembly can produce as many as three lighting circuits in one CLW run. Flat cable is designed for installation in standard U-shaped framing strut, UL listed as surface metal raceway. CLW cable consists of four PVC insulated AWG stranded copper conductors and can provide infinite number of tap-offs without aligning and installing outlet boxes. Tele-Power Pole, also from Wiremold, has two channels for delivering separated power and communications circuits from overhead to points of use. Channel is prewired with four specification grade grounding receptacles. Easy to remove access cover located low on the pole makes it easy to update telephone services at any time with the pole in place. Circle No. 213.

Soon to be introduced from AMP Inc. is an undercarpet wiring system for branch circuit wiring. Easily installed, the system is a cost-effective alternative to service wiring in commercial areas. The new system will eliminate need for ducts, raceways, and power poles. It incorporates type FCC cable, consisting of three or more flat copper conductors placed edge to edge, separated and enclosed within an insulating assembly. Bottom shield is affixed to primary floor with adhesive, topped with cable, and covered by protective metal shield. Floor then can be covered with carpet tiles. Transition from conventional electrical branch wiring to flat cable is made through boxes located in floor at baseboard level. Circle No. 216.

Brand Rex undercarpet telephone cable is expressly designed for interconnection of telephone key sets directly from phone or call director to distribution box. Eliminates need for ductwork, conduit, power poles, and raised floors. Cable is flat, co-planar, and contains 25 pair of round copper conductors that can be terminated to stand telephone connectors. Primary pairs are sheathed in a flame-retardant jacket. Teletape provides excellent crosstalk control, pair to pair and cable to cable. Therefore, cables can be stacked easily. Circle No. 217.

Switchable squares means one can alter design patterns at will, direct traffic flow, or highlight particular rooms or areas. Rugged, patented backing prevents curl or buckle, sag or stretch. Several blends of super tough, durable nylon fibers in either tufted loop or cut pile constructions are available in a wide variety of colors. Atactic polypropylene backings cope with extreme ranges of temperatures and are not affected by bacteria or alkalis. Heuga meets all specifier demands on flammability, wear, color control, acoustics, static electricity, and construction of face density where stated as a requirement.* Circle No. 220.

The TUCC system for telephone cabling under carpet from Western Electric eliminates the need for ducting or raised floors. Simple cable installation is out of sight, with no visible utility poles and no associated raceways. TUCC cable is a multi-pair flat cable taped to the floor and acts as an extension cord between zone distributing conduits and telephone connection boxes anchored to the floor at the end of each cable run. An essential part of TUCC is a conduit distribution system called zone distribution, which minimizes the amount of cable waving that might occur if all flat cables terminated at the telephone closet. Cable is 2½ inches wide and 25 mils thick, and consists of 25 pair of 26 gauge flat copper conductors sandwiched between two insulating layers of polyester. Circle No. 221.

Tex-Tiles, made by Collins & Aikman, are available in eight carpet qualities, including cut pile, level loop, textured loop, and cut pile frieze look. Most are in continuous filament nylon. Each quality has a range of 10 to 12 colors, some in custom shades. Tough, resilient vinyl substrate assures stability and endurance. The 18-inch modular carpet tiles coordinate with Collins & Aikman's Powerbond, 6-inch wide vinyl-backed roll goods. Circle No. 222.

Easily installed, undercarpet cabling system for 125 V, 15 and 20 ampere single and multi-phase branch circuits is offered by Thomas & Betts. Eliminates core drilling and need for in-floor wiring methods such as duct, conduit, and cellular. The flat conductor cable system can be laid out on any concrete floor and covered by carpet tiles. A bottom shield protects cable run from mechanical abuse, and a metallic shield at top protects it mechanically and electrically. Power outlets can be located where needed in any desired pattern or at random. Power is available through duplex receptacles in floor tombstones mounted anywhere a power outlet is needed. Splices connect the end of one reel of cable to the beginning of the next, eliminating waste. (Not shown.) Circle No. 223.

The InterLoc system from Liskey is composed of a removable steel floor panel, adjustable pedestal, corner tie, and edge coupler. Since each panel is interlocked to its four supporting pedestals and adjacent panels, shifting and rattle are virtually impossible. Removal of panels provides access to underfloor cavity with no grid members or stringers to remove or replace. ElaFlor service outlets are pre-wired to mate with Emerson Electro/Connect system. All boxes accept telephone amphenol connector and contain one or two standard receptacles. New from Liskey and Milliken are magnetic carpet tiles for access flooring called Magna-Tile. Combined of flexible, permanent magnetic backing and dense fusion-bonded carpet. Will not shift or edge curl, and do not require adhesive. Circle No. 225.

"Marketing Radar"

Arthur C. Nielsen, Jr.

This is how the Chairman of the Board of one of the country's largest marketing research firms describes the value of the Census to the nation's business community.

READ on to see how the Census can be of value to you and your business.

Who is your market?

If you own or manage a business, you are a marketer. Hopefully, a successful one. But you can't market successfully unless you know to whom you are selling. You must understand both your present customer and your potential customer. To do this, you need accurate information about the population, and lots of it.

It's easy

To get this information you usually have to hire a professional marketing firm, or purchase several series of reports.

This can get very complicated.

You can get an enormous amount of this kind of valuable marketing research data from the Census Bureau on your own. All it takes is a letter or a phone call and this information is readily available to you.

Just answer the Census

All you have to do is create this information. Just answer it and encourage your employees to do the same. The more people who answer the Census, the more valid and abundant the information will be. So, you see, it's in your best interest to have your whole company participate along with you.

More from Nielsen

"The Census is an essential tool in modern marketing research...the Census is essential in the manufacture and distribution of products...essential, too, for service companies." Mr. Nielsen said, further, that all his clients use Census data for these purposes:

- Allocating sales efforts
- Picking areas for evaluating new products with selective appeal
- Studying relationships between retail sales and consumer characteristics
- Forecasting long-term sales trends
- Selecting sites for manufacturing plants, retail stores
- Targeting for direct-mail programs
- Evaluating the potential for speciality products
- Analyzing trends for marketing planning
- Developing advertising strategies based on demographic characteristics.

Here's how it can work

- A men's clothing store, planning to mail a circular to potential new customers, could use Census data on income by Zip code area to select Zips which have a high proportion of families and individuals in the appropriate income ranges.
- A lumber and hardware store, seeking a theme and particular products for an advertising campaign, would find Census statistics for its marketing area valuable in researching age of housing, presence of basements, family income, heating fuel used, and other housing and population characteristics.
- A business person, selecting a site for a new sporting goods store, would want to consider Census data on the number of people by age group, household composition, family and individual income, and other population characteristics, to decide which area would offer the most promising market for sporting goods.

A lot of people pay a lot for professional marketing services. You can get a lot of this information just by answering the Census.

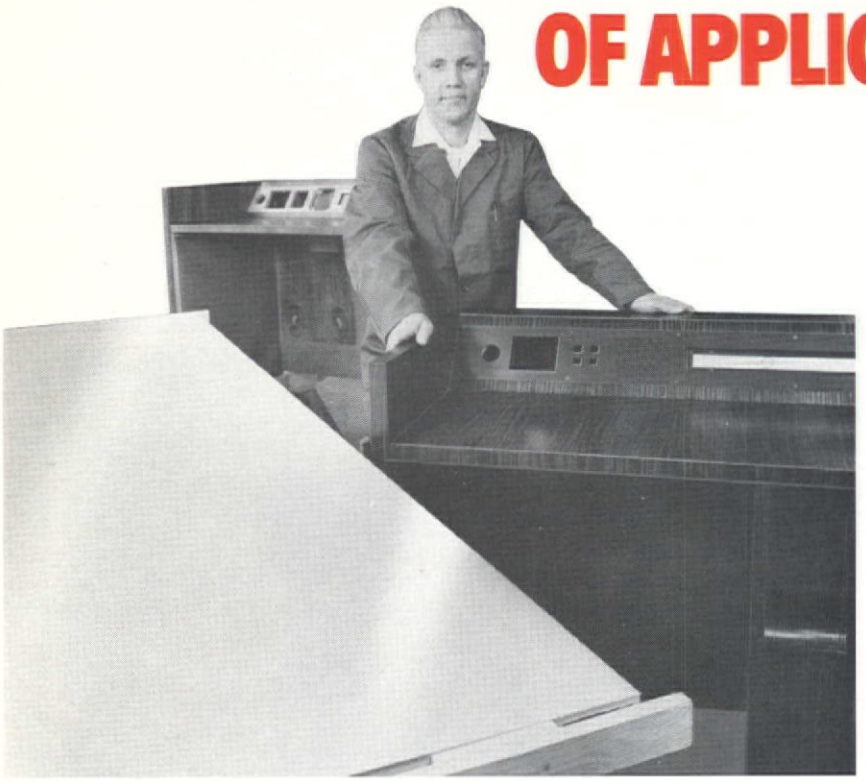
FOR ARCHITECTURAL WOODWORKING, NVF YORKITE® VERSATILITY IMPROVES QUALITY AND CUTS COSTS IN WIDE RANGE OF APPLICATIONS



Max Schaupp displays ebony and teak desks, both protected against checking by Yorkite crossbanding. Gleaming surface on long door in foreground will never show wood grain because both sides are faced with Yorkite.

"What I like about Yorkite is its versatility," says Max Schaupp, Plant Manager for Eckert-Johnson Corp., architectural woodworkers, North Bergen, New Jersey. "That helps us control our inventory costs.

"Every contract we receive is different, since all our work is custom designed. Right now we are completing the architectural woodwork and custom furniture for a major executive headquarters building. We are also manufacturing custom design executive furniture in teak, ebony, french walnut, walnut burl and amboina burl. Next, we may be fabricating wood paneling or conference and board room tables for executive offices.

"Because no two of our orders are alike, the economical way to go is to order one material that we can use for crossbanding, edgebanding, as a face veneer or a balance sheet for high pressure laminates or veneers, depending on the application. We buy Yorkite in rolls and cut it to any size we need.

"We can't use anything but Yorkite for crossbanding under burl and similar fancy face veneers, because those faces need strength in all directions. Yorkite positively prevents checking.

"When we want a smooth, glossy painted surface, we use Yorkite as a face veneer. We used Maple previously. Like all hardwoods, however, the veneer tends to check, and the splices separate or show through the finish over a period of time. Since Yorkite is one uniform piece, these common defects are overcome. In addition, less coating materials are required to obtain the desired finish."

Eckert-Johnson, architectural woodworker, has joined the country's furniture manufacturers in discovering that Yorkite is the answer to many of the industry's age-old problems. If you work with wood, Yorkite can solve problems for you, too. Call Jerry Saimre or Jim Wilfong at 302/239-5281.

WATTS NEW

ENERGY MANAGEMENT VIEWS FROM THE NATIONAL ELECTRICAL CONTRACTORS ASSOCIATION VOL. III NO. 5

DON'T TURN DOWN THE LIGHTS — TURN UP THE TECHNOLOGY.

As utility bills continue to go up and up, building managers and executives continue to look for ways to cut energy costs. One of the most obvious ways is to reduce the wattage used by lighting systems.

But this isn't as simple as it may seem. In fact, a general reduction in overall lighting may even lead to a rise in overall costs. How? Well, it has been proven that lighting levels greatly affect working efficiency. For example, when the lighting level in a Social Security Administration office was reduced from 110FC (footcandles) to 50FC, worker productivity fell twenty-eight percent. To make up for this lost efficiency, more workers and more overtime were needed and overall costs increased. When original lighting levels were restored, productivity increased immediately and eventually reached its original level.

So now the question is, "How do you reduce lighting energy costs and still maintain working efficiency?" And the answer is "new lighting technology," in both the way lighting systems are designed and the kinds of lamps they employ.

Today, most offices, plants and stores have uniform lighting systems. They were designed to provide proper lighting in almost all situations (e.g. the moving of desks or work stations). But uniform lighting does have disadvantages. It can cause uncomfortable glare, it can produce unwanted shadows, and most important, it uses energy very inefficiently.

Now, however, with advances that allow lighting panels to be easily relocated, uniform lighting is no longer necessary. And a new "nonuniform" lighting system may be the perfect answer to cut your high lighting costs.

Nonuniform lighting concentrates on areas where it is most needed such as desks, work stations and conference tables, and provides lower-contrast light in less vital locations such as storage rooms, wall spaces and reception areas. Nonuniform lighting creates a more attractive visual environment, which eliminates visual boredom and results in higher productivity. It lowers initial installation costs because it takes less time to install and uses fewer fixtures and lamps. The fewer number of fixtures can reduce lighting energy costs by as much as thirty percent. Less fixtures also reduce maintenance costs. If offices or equipment are rearranged, a well-designed nonuniform lighting system can be easily changed to meet the new requirements.

Recent technological advances have also produced new kinds of lamps that produce far more light per watt of electricity. In some cases you may want to replace traditional types of lamps with new, more efficient versions of the same thing, such as fluorescent lamps. Other situations may call for the new high-intensity discharge lamps. These include the mercury vapor, metal halide, and high-pressure sodium lamps, now made for office applications and other indoor uses. While these lamps are more expensive than their fluorescent or incandescent counterparts, the savings they generate result in long-term cost savings, and in some cases, initial cost savings as well.

If you're thinking about putting in a more energy-efficient lighting system or installing more effective lamps, it's a good idea to talk to a qualified electrical contractor first. He can survey your lighting needs, make recommendations, give you an estimate of the initial cost and possible operating cost savings, and answer your questions about installation.

WEST WEEK 80 MARCH 23 ★ 26

WOMEN IN DESIGN

It's happening in Los Angeles!

The Pacific Design Center responds to the need for a "one market a year" major new product presentation and design conference. West Week '79 was a smash success... and now, West Week '80 promises to inaugurate the new decade with an even greater market. More products—new showrooms—exhibits—seminars—social events—all in one fantastic blue package: The PDC... and you are invited!

This fourth annual West Week is the first of an innovative new series of themed markets. West Week '80 is Women in Design. The programs and exhibits have been developed to explore and support the expanding roles which women fulfill in the vital design functions of our industry.

This is the West Week:

Sunday: A celebration of the merger of Otis Art Institute and Parsons School of Design... champagne—music—scholarship presentation.

Monday: Women in Design present a full day of programs and the inauguration of Women in Design Awards at a Los Angeles County Art Museum reception in the evening.

Tuesday: The American Institute of Architects programs which explore Women in Design and Architecture.

Wednesday: The N.H.F.L. and A.S.I.D. sponsor seminars on "Interpersonal Power" and "The Designing Woman" plus a special Media Communication luncheon seminar.

Thursday: I.B.D. repeats its fantastic Student Rally.

West Week '80 is the market of the year in The Marketplace of the West. "Be there."

Owens-Corning sound dividers. Designed so your design gets noticed. Not ours.

We don't expect people at work to appreciate the classic lines of our sound divider system.

They may not notice the handsome fabric covering. Or how beautifully the dividers fit together.

They may never see the electrical raceway hidden in the base or the shelf-hanging capability.

And they can't possibly know that their privacy comes from our special sound-absorbent Fiberglas* core inside each panel.

What they will notice is what really matters: the total landscape you've created.

For a free Sound Screen catalog, color selector, and booklet, "Speech Privacy in the Open Office," write A.E.K. Meeks, Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corporation, Fiberglas Tower, Toledo, Ohio 43659.

IT TOOK MICHELANGELO FOUR YEARS TO DECORATE THE SISTINE CHAPEL.

WE COULD HAVE DONE IT IN FOUR DAYS.

But, instead of working with paints, we work with photographs.

At Photographic Specialties, we can make Cibachrome® prints or transparencies large enough to cover an entire wall or ceiling. And we can make them from virtually any photograph.

So you can use a photo of the outdoors, for example, to open up a small room. Or use large transparencies to display products in a sales office. The only limit to their usefulness is your imagination.

And Cibachrome prints won't fade. They may not last as long as Michelangelo's masterpiece. But only time will tell.

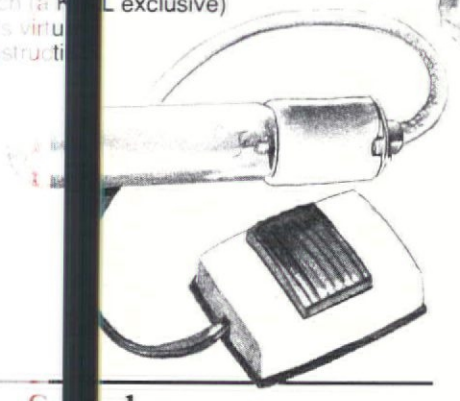
The F-1043 reading lamp. One of our classics. It's easy to specify a less expensive "knock-off." Here are some reasons for specifying the original.

The Shade

We make the shade on our F-1043 floor lamp out of brass heavy gauge brass, with seams skillfully and patiently machined until they're invisible. And then we first grind, polish, then buff the whole shade, by hand, before and after finishing. Inside, a coat of special reflective paint. Outside, either a plating of solid chromium or a coat of crystal-clear lacquer baked to a hard, tarnish-resistant finish.

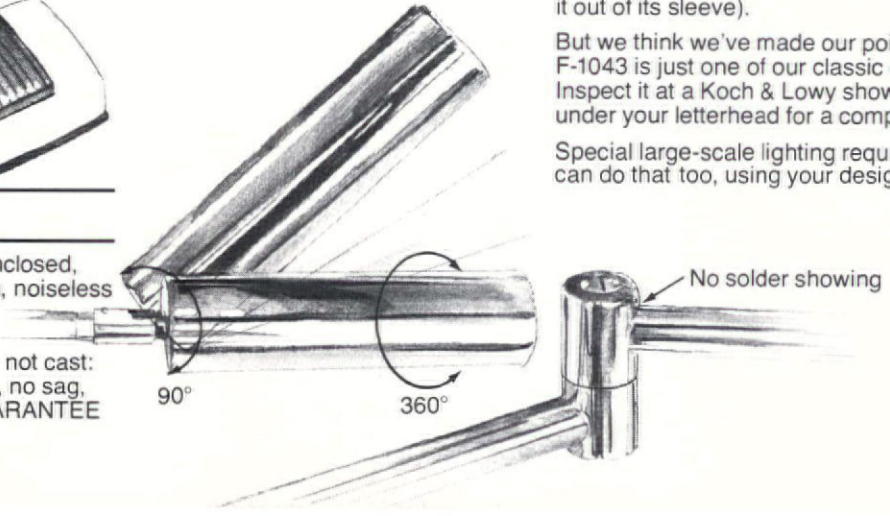
The Socket

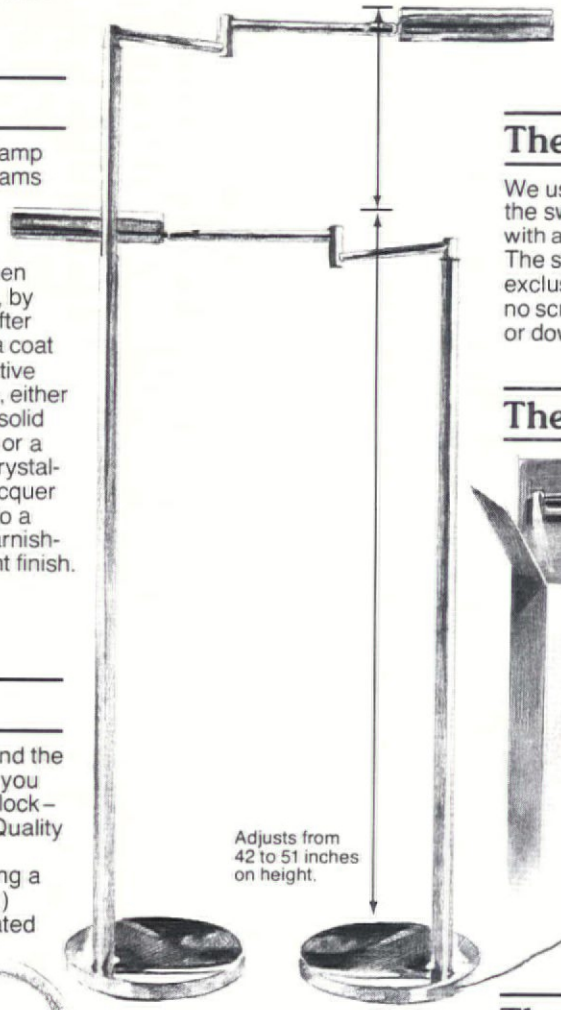
Cardboard and tin? We use porcelain. And the difference depends on how many years you intend to keep the lamp. With a positive lock–no separation when you change bulbs. Quality wiring, too. Inside, smooth, resilient silk covering that won't jam. (Just try adjusting a knock-off, up and down more than once.) Outside, tough plastic. Plus a foot-operated switch (a K & L exclusive) that's virtually indestructible.



The Swivel

The swivel on the F-1043 is fully enclosed, with nylon mounting rings for smooth, noiseless operation. You get a full 360° rotation plus 90° tilt. And it's solid brass. And machined, not cast: no sandholes, no cracks, no ridges, no sag, droop, or flaw. SO GOOD WE GUARANTEE THE SWIVEL FOREVER.





The Adjustments

We use ⅝" diameter brass (not ½" steel) for the swing arm. And we make them ourselves with a permanent stop–no twisted wires inside. The stem? Brass again, and a full 1⅛". With an exclusive K & L design that needs no knobs, no screws, no locks. You just move the lamp up or down and it stays there!

The Protection

First we put extra cushioning at key points. Then we shrink wrap. Then we seal it all in a specially reinforced corrugated shipping container to defy even the most sadistic freight handlers.

The Grand Finale

We could go on and on. About the base (a full ten inches and a full nine pounds). About the height adjustment (there's no way you can pull it out of its sleeve).

But we think we've made our point. And the F-1043 is just one of our classic collection. Inspect it at a Koch & Lowy showroom or write under your letterhead for a complete catalog.

Special large-scale lighting requirements? We can do that too, using your designs or ours.

When it comes to commercial interior furnishings we're strictly top drawer.

The pride that hammered these nails made this chair a Gregson.

Each part of a Gregson is fashioned with a pride in the finished chair. Each detail of workmanship bears the stamp of the craftman's pride. The result is a chair that lasts for years because it's a Gregson right down to each nail.

Discover the pleasure of getting together with a Gregson.

With Dukane sound masking, the office can be open . . .

Open offices are wise investments in many ways. They dramatically increase usable floor space and reduce maintenance costs. Lower heating and cooling costs. Help cut construction and rental costs. Offer outstanding flexibility when changing office layouts. Save time and money. Even help build efficiency and employee morale.

Dukane sound masking makes the open office even more practical. These electronic systems help achieve a higher degree of speech privacy in a busy office. Allow personnel to converse freely while helping preserve greater privacy for each work station.

Dukane sound masking works by preoccupying the ear, yet goes unnoticed itself. It is one of four essential ingredients to obtain the ultimate in a pleasant open office. The others are sound-absorbing dividers, ceiling tile and carpeting.

Dukane has more than 50 years experience with sound systems and a nationwide organization of distributors. They can custom-design a sound masking system for the acoustical conditions of your open office . . . also master clock, intercom, music, paging and evacuation communications. Send for information today.

New Quinlan Printmakers catalog is a specially designed selling tool.

Albert Quinlan's photo-serigraphs blend the old technique of silk-screen printing with photography, showcasing his intuitive feeling for light and textural harmonies.

Quinlan photo-serigraphs are already in many public buildings and private collections. The new catalog opens the way for you to offer them to your clients.

Quinlan prints are produced in limited editions of 250 or less, hand-pulled, numbered and signed in pencil by the artist.

The new catalog presents each print on an individual sheet of appropriate size to provide a real feeling for the colors used. A single print can be pulled and placed in a specific location to check compatibility with existing decor, sent to your customer for approval, or arranged with other Quinlan prints in groupings to determine the over-all effect.

Quinlan Printmakers work closely with designers, decorators and architects and offer custom color service for special projects.

For a catalog, please send $2.00 to: Quinlan Printmakers, Dept. C 1765 Maple St., Northfield, IL 60093 (312) 441-6539
